FIRE LADS TO STAGE PICNIC SUNDAY

Frankfort Vol. Fire Dept. To Sponsor Annual Outing

This coming Sunday, July 24, all roads will lead to the Frankfort grove. The particular occasion being the first annual picnic of the Frankfort Volunteer Fire Department.

The Fire Laddies are staging an exceptionally attractive program for both afternoon and evening.

Two soft ball games in which a colored team will be featured will be the main attraction of the afternoon. There will be a hill billy band, a band concert by the Frankfort band and for those who like a little more excitement, will be rides on a merry-go-round and the Whip.

There will be a brilliant display of fireworks in the evening. Dancing will be in order from 9 to 1, with music by Gene Victor's orchestra.

Everyone is most cordially invited to attend this affair and by doing so will help the Frankfort Fire Department to realize the needed funds with which to carry on their work.

A very good time is assured to those who attend.

Mokena Police Magistrate Finds Money Under Plate

About two weeks ago, Police Magistrate Albert Hentsch of Mokena, while in a tavern on Collins street in Joliet missed his wallet containing $38. He felt that he had been pick-pocketed and reported the supposed theft to the police department in Joliet. Last week Mr. Hentsch was greatly surprised when he found the missing money under a plate in a cupboard of his home in Mokena. So it is not a case of being robbed, but just a case of misplacing the money.

She is survived by one son, Fred five grandchildren, Mrs. Mildred Brubaker and Ira Kopleman of Montana; Evelyn, Earl and Eleanor Kopleman of Homer Township, 2 nieces and 2 nephews.

The funeral services were held from the Goodale Funeral home in Lockport on Sunday afternoon with Rev. Wolsted Congregational minister officiating. Miss Louise Storm sang at the interment at Brooks cemetery.

The Good Luck camp R. N. A. No. 2214 also held a very impressive service at the chapel.

Walsh Family In Double Celebration

This coming Saturday evening the Colonial hall at New Lenox will be the scene of a double celebration.

First Mr. and Mrs. A. W. Walsh of New Lenox will celebrate their 25th wedding anniversary, and at the same time the wedding of their daughter, Dolores, to Leonard Anderson of Joliet will also be celebrated, altho the wedding will take place this coming Sunday afternoon in the home of the bride's aunt in Gary, Indiana.

Following the wedding the young couple plan to go on a short honeymoon trip. They will make their home in a newly furnished dwelling known as the Greenman place north of New Lenox.

The host of friends of this young couple wish them a great deal of happiness.

New Lenox Gets New Paved Road

New Lenox Township is getting another concrete road. Cedar street from the Francis road north to Maple road also known as the Southwest highway, a distance of one mile, is being paved. The contractors have been on the job for the past week.

FRANKFORT MUSHROOM PLANT BURNS

Fire of undetermined origin, broke out in the northwest corner of the large mushroom factory of Bogdon Bros., in Frankfort about two a. m., last Friday morning. The night watchman was sitting in his auto near the building asleep. The smoke of the burning building drifting into the car, awoke him. He ran over to the George Schroeder farm and put in a call for the Frankfort Fire Department who responded very quickly with their new fire truck, and also their old truck.

The firemen quickly discovered that they were unable to fight the blaze due to the lack of water. As the building, which was located along the J railroad, southwest of Frankfort, was too far from the nearest village fire hydrant, it was impossible to get any water.

The interior of the building was filled with sulphur fumes from a sulphur mixture used in fumigating the mushroom plants and no one could enter the building.

The entire building and contents were destroyed at an estimated loss of $6,000, covered by insurance.

The fire seemed to have broken out in the boiler room where a well pump was also located for supplying the building with water. There was no fire in the furnace under the boiler and no motors were in operation, so just what caused the fire is a mystery.

The mushroom plant had been in use for quite a number of years and the stock was shipped all over the United States.

Bogdon Bros., also had an interest in the Tinley Park Mushroom Factory for sometime.

Hundreds of people from miles around witnessed the spectacular blaze.

Farmers Invited To A Combine Demonstration

Every farmer is invited to see the new, small McCormick-Deering No. 60 Harvester-Thresher "combine" grain on the Illinois Grass Company farm, (the old Albers farm) 191st Street and Crawford Ave., Thursday, July 28.

"We aren't going to ask anyone to buy, believe it or not," says Mr. J. F. Schmaedeke, McCormick-Deering dealer at Orland Park, who is staging the demonstration. "We are going to be unique to that extent. With factory production sold for this season on the No. 60," Mr. Schmaedeke says, "we'll be lucky if we can get all the machines we need for this year."

"We just want farmers to see this small McCormick-Deering in action. Then let each one judge for himself whether he thinks we are right in making the claims we do for this machine. We say that the No. 60 will do a good job of cutting grain whether the crop is a good stand or whether it is down. It does a clean job of threshing, and it doesn't let any of the crop go to waste through inefficient threshing or cleaning."

"The Harvester Company has been building combines for a good many years. This long experience shows up to good advantage in this new 6-foot harvester-thresher. It is designed right and built right. Fellows who pride themselves on being good threshermen are keen about the threshing job the No. 60 does. And this machine will thresh a wide variety of crops in addition to oats, wheat, rye, barley and so on."

Among the features of this machine that Mr. Schmaedeke points out are straight line threshing which allows the grain to go through the threshing unit in a straight line as in a stationary thresher, the all-metal auger which does away with the canvas platform and is as durable as the machine itself; the rubber cylinder; various cutting heights; easy adjustments for varying conditions; three-section straw rack; and the efficient cleaning system.

Drake To Cry Sale

This Friday night 17 head of live stock are to be sold at the New Lenox Live Stock Market. Col. C. B. Drake of Joliet will conduct the sale personally.

Supervised Play At Mokena Ends Next Tuesday

The last day of the Supervised Play and Recreation period, sponsored by the PTA of Mokena is here, and the leaders and the committee plan to have a special treat for the children by giving them a little party on Tuesday, July 26 at 7:45 p.m. at the school.

The children are asked to wear some kind of a costume to give a festive touch to the evening. A prize will be given to the prettiest and the funniest costume. The children will be glad to show their parents that they have not only enjoyed many a hike, but have also found time to make quite a few little articles out of otherwise useless material.

Of course they count on everybody in the community who is interested in them, to come and watch them play games and have races.

During the procession which will mark the end of the evening, the children will carry Chinese lanterns and sing while marching on the school ground. So please come, and join them in their fun and make them happy.

St. Jude's Prepare For Annual Picnic

A forth coming event in which considerable local interest is being taken, is the annual picnic of St. Jude's Catholic church of New Lenox to be held in the village of New Lenox on Sunday afternoon and evening August 7th. The program is: sports and games for young and old. There are also other interesting features.

Plan 3 Year High School Course At Orland Park

The Board of Directors of the Orland Park High School are planning on adding another year of school work for local boys and girls. The present course of study carries the students through the sophomore year. The junior year will be added in September if enough students register for the third year on Wednesday, July 27th.

It is most important that all students planning on attending register so that the Board of Education can determine whether there will be enough students enrolled to make the additional year desirable from a financial point of view. There should be at least fifteen registrants for the third year.

If you cannot register personally, have someone register for you, or phone Mr. Linden, Palos Park 110-J-2 for your intention of attending for the third year.

First and Second Year Students Should Register

It is also desirable for prospective first and second year students to register at this time, inasmuch as the usual registration one week before school opens, will not be held. This will give the total high school enrollment and will help considerably in planning for school work in September.

The Board of Education believes that there are many young people in our community who will receive one more year of education if this course of study is added, and that there are many who normally complete their high school work at other schools who will be desirous of continuing at Orland Park for the third year.

Former students, or others, who in the past either graduated or ended their education with the sophomore year, or who have not studied typing, bookkeeping and shorthand, and who would like to learn these subjects, would do well to take advantage of the commercial work to be offered at Orland Park.

The third year course will be designed to give students the same studies which are given at nearly all four year high schools. New equipment, such as desks, typewriters, books, etc., will be purchased and a high standard of excellence in physical equipment will be attained. Another teacher will be added to the faculty, thus insuring the small pupil-teacher ratio that has been maintained in previous years. The major subjects to be added to the curriculum will be: typing, shorthand (probably Gregg's system), English III and economics or history.

A course of study for the entire high school is given below. Some changes may be made in September so the following is only tentative:

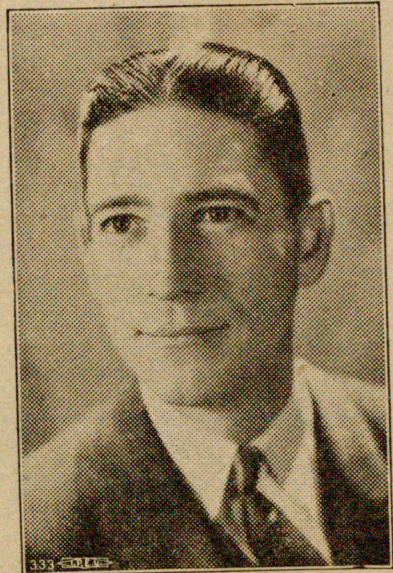

FIRST YEAR—General Science, Algebra, English, World History, Mechanical Drawing, Sewing and Domestic Arts, Physical Education.

LYON CARAVAN VISITS WILL COUNTY TOWNS

Monday and Tuesday were busy days for Richard Lyons, Republican candidate for United States Senator when he and several state candidates made a tour of Will County towns in the white trailer presented to Mr. Lyons by the Young Republicans of Illinois.

The unusual and interesting caravan is the first of its type to be used in election campaigns in Illinois and the state candidates have started early in their campaign and are making an intensive speaking tour thruout Illinois. They expect to be in Cook County a little later.

In his tour of the country towns,

RICHARD J. LYONS
REPUBLICAN CANDIDATE
FOR UNITED STATES SENATOR

Mr. Lyons and his party and Will County Republican candidates for county offices visited Mokena Tuesday forenoon where they were greeted by a large and enthusiastic group. Mr. Lyons gave a short but forceful address in which he pointed to the war torn countries of Europe and said that all the countries of Europe are sitting on the very edge of a big explosion which might come at any time and when this does happen the world war will be just a little skirmish in comparison.

He declared, that if sent to Washington, he will not favor any foreign entangling alliances and will do all in his power to keep America out of European troubles. He advocates not a son nor one cent for foreign intervention, but is ready to pledge the limit for the defense of our home shores.

Mr. Lyons also stated that a secret meeting was recently held in New York by munition kings for the purpose of getting this country embroiled in European conflicts and plans for conducting a campaign of hate and propaganda were being formulated. The speaker emphasized the point that Boak Carter, well known radio news commentator, had been taken off the air when he dared to expose and criticize this nefarious ring.

Following the Mokena stop, the caravan proceeded to Frankfort, New Lenox and back to Joliet and was climaxed in the evening with a rally in the Taft school in Lockport.

Monday evening, Mr. Lyons and his party met the Republican leaders and workers of Will County at a reception in the Woodruff Hotel in Joliet. Later in the evening he spoke at the Labor Temple in Joliet.

Asserting that the New Deal was hiding its own failure and lack of a solution for recovery and re-employment in the United States, Richard J. Lyons declared that he was "fed-up" with the administration charges that the Republicans have no constructive program to offer.

Last Sunday evening a beautiful colored picture slide program of the marvels and beauties of nature in the western states was shown. There was a very good attendance.

German Day Hit

Lowering skies failed to dampen the enthusiasm of the German born when they held their annual German Day at the Frankfort Grove last Sunday afternoon and evening and fully 7,000 people attended. Many of those participating were attired in colorful native garb. Addresses were given by Senator R. J. Barr, County Judge George N. Blatt, City Treasurer Gustave Brandt of Chicago and several others. The bands of Manhattan, Frankfort, New Lenox and Mokena played and everyone in attendance enjoyed a jolly time.

W. Niedringhouse Pie Contest Winner

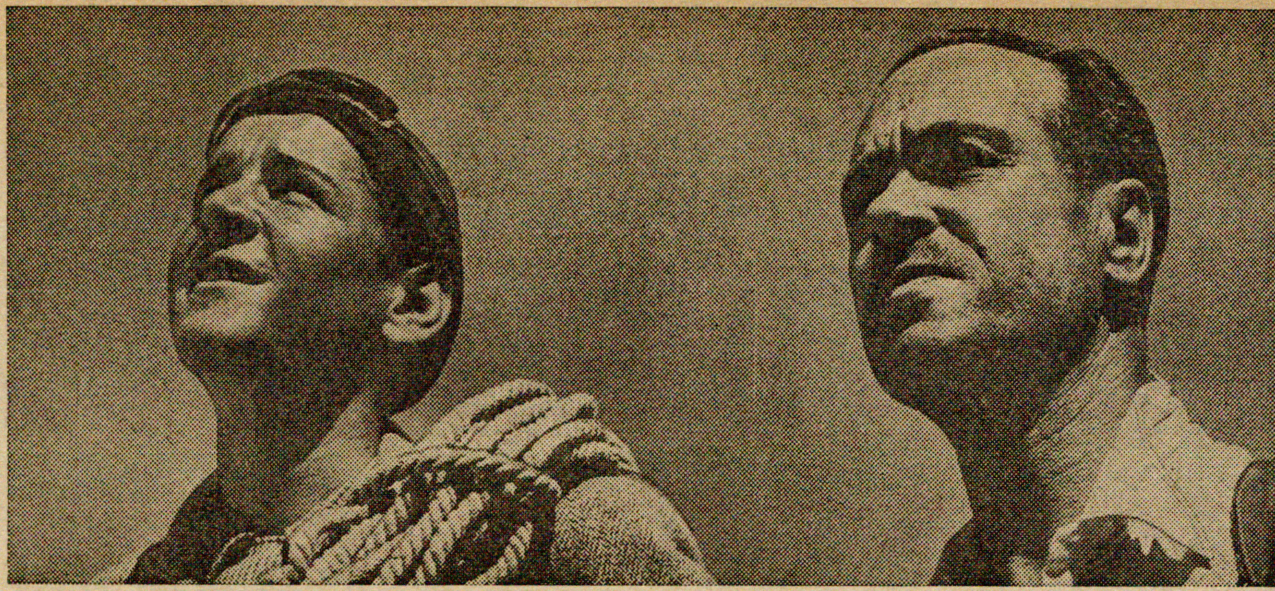

The blue berry pie eating contest sponsored by the Mokena business men in connection with the weekly Wednesday night out door picture show drew a very large crowd Wednesday evening.

When the pie eating contest started there was a goodly line of contestants. A long table on which a large number of blue berry pies were placed was the center of attraction for a few minutes.

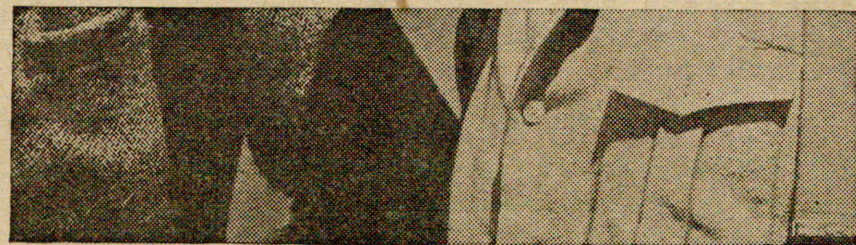

The youngsters pitched right in and had about as much blue berries over their faces as they had in their stomachs.

Wilbur Niedringhaus of Lincoln Estates finished in the shortest allotted time and was awarded a one dollar cash prize.

NOBODY knows why people climb mountains. Certainly not to visit angelic friends, for Heaven is still far above the loftiest peak. Best explanation is the feeling of accomplishment upon reaching the summit, far over-shadowing the feeling of pain in your weary legs. One savant, John E. Burchard, says nothing of value is ever found above 20,000 feet, so why bother? But in Switzerland, home of the world's most ardent Alpinists, mountain climbing is justified simply by the intense personal satisfaction it brings. There are no cheers or victor's wreaths awaiting you at the top . . . just a chance to sit down and rest.

BUSINESS ON THE UP-GRADE

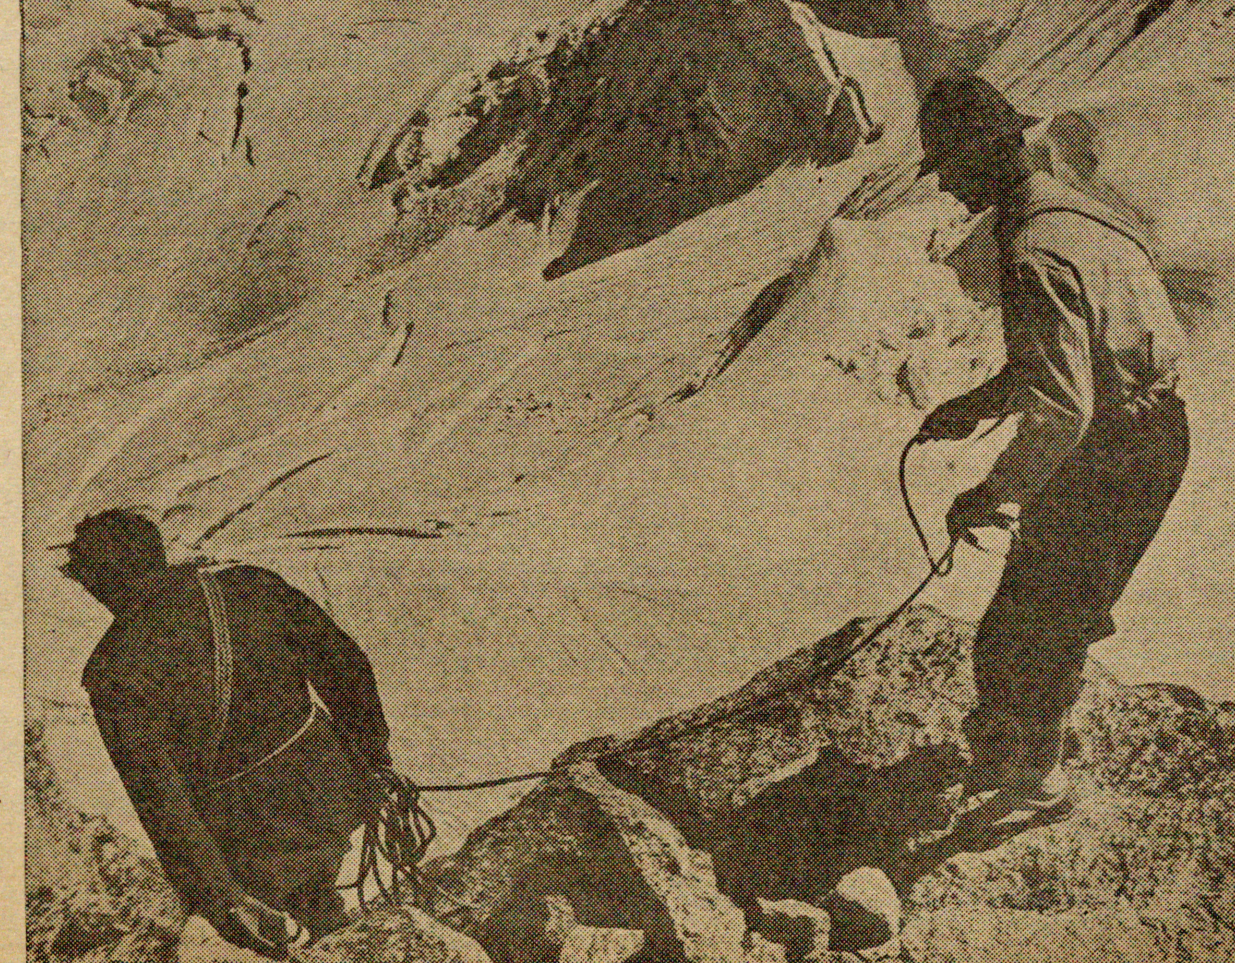

At the left are three hardy Swiss mountain climbers starting for the famed Matterhorn. The discouraging feature is that several weary hours later (below) the Matterhorn looks almost as far away. Now the trail is getting steep; it's no longer a pleasant afternoon's jaunt.

About this time you would doff heavy hiking boots for light-weight climbing slippers; then you're ready for almost everything, and you really get it as witness the above picture! Eventually you reach the top of the Matterhorn (right) a mere 14,763 painstaking feet above sea level.

Enthusiastic climbers aren't satisfied with mere climbing. The gentleman above is taking a side trip to the jagged pinnacles of the Punta Rasica, though he realizes he will find nothing upon reaching the pinnacle. Eventually we start homeward (right) thinking it will be easier on the way down. That's where we're wrong. You don't just jump; every foot of the way must be traversed cautiously. Oh, to be a mountain goat at a time like this!

Saucer, Plate Design For a Hooked Rug

By RUTH WYETH SPEARS

GREAT-GRANDMOTHER made her own designs for quilts and hooked rugs and many of her most interesting patterns were developed by drawing around pieces of china. The antique rug shown here may be copied either in rags or rug yarn. Great-Grandmother used rags, and her best rugs were always made of woolen materials torn in strips about 3/4-inch wide or narrower.

The foundation of the rug is burlap. The design is drawn on the burlap with a very soft pencil or crayon by tracing part way around a medium sized plate as at A and then a saucer as at B. Allowance should be made for a hem and the plain border. The three colors indicated in the diagram are repeated throughout this rug.

Some hook rug makers stretch the burlap foundation tightly over a wooden frame while they work. Others think they do just as well without a frame. Rug hooks of the general type shown here are for sale in department stores. The strip of material, or yarn, is held under the burlap with the left hand and the loops pulled through to the right side with the hook as shown at C.

NOTE: If you wish to use these weekly articles for reference paste them in a scrapbook, as they are not included in either Sewing Book No. 1 or 2. Book 1, "Sewing for the Home Decorator," covers curtains, slipcovers, dressing tables; 48 pages of fascinating directions. Book 2 illustrates 90 embroidery stitches with numerous applications; doll clothes and gift items. Order by number, enclosing 25 cents for each book desired. Address Mrs. Spears, 210 S. Desplains St., Chicago, Ill.

Here's good advice for a woman during her change (usually from 38 to 42), who fears she'll lose her appeal to men, who worries about hot flashes, loss of pep, dizzy spells, upset nerves and moody spells. It helps Nature build up physical resistance, thus helps give more vivacity to enjoy life and assist calming jittery nerves and disturbing symptoms that often accompany change of life. HELP KIDNEYS

To Get Rid of Acid and Poisonous Waste

Your kidneys help to keep you well by constantly filtering waste matter from the blood. If your kidneys get functionally disordered and fail to remove excess impurities, there may be poisoning of the whole system and body-wide distress. Burning, scanty or too frequent urination may be a warning of some kidney or bladder disturbance.

You may suffer nagging backache, persistent headache, attacks of dizziness, getting up nights, swelling, puffiness under the eyes—feel weak, nervous, all played out. In such cases it is better to rely on a medicine that has won country-wide acclaim than on something less favorably known. Use Doan's Pills. A multitude of grateful people recommend Doan's. Sunshine 4-H Club News

The regular meeting of the Sunshine 4-H club was held Thursday evening, July 14 at the home of Clara and Mildred Steinborn in honor of the latter's birthday.

Plans were discussed for the County contest to be held in Blue Island on July 26.

It was then decided that we would have a picnic for the club on Aug. 21 in the forest preserve at 147th and Harlem. A committee for this purpose was then appointed by our President. They are: Mary and Eleanor Dowling and Helen Sippel. Patricia Dowling told us about "Beauty for 11 year olds", followed by a demonstration on "Correct Makeup" by Mary and Eleanor Dowling.

The birthday song was then sung for Mildred and several games were played followed by a delicious lunch. Our next meeting will be Aug. 4.

Helen Sippel, Club reporter.

Mrs. O. B. Murphy wishes to take exception to last week's article about Mrs. W. Semmler's garden plant known as "Hen and Chick".

She now has three plants blooming in her garden. She also invites anybody who cares to call and come and see them.

One of our prominent citizens has made quite a name for himself. His advise is to try taking a little fancy work with you (as he did) when your fisherman's luck has failed.

We aren't mentioning any names but Mr. and Mrs. James English and family, Mrs. Emily Wyman and son Norman of Tinley and Mrs. Carrie Elder of Chenaault, Ky. rented a cabin for a week at Arbor Vitor, Wis. to try their luck at fishing.

During the first couple of days, Jim's luck didn't seem so good. One of these days Mrs. English missed her fancy work on which she was wont to while away her time while waiting in camp for the fishermen. On Jim's return that day she mentioned the fact and he sheepishly pulled said fancy work from his fishing equipment. His story was that it got there by mistake. We don't know whether his wife believed him or not, anyway she went with him after that and they caught several large northern Pike.

The party also reports seeing some large deer on their trip.

They also visited in the Black Hills and at Rushmore, S. Dakota.

Bringing the News

DOWN to SIZE

BIG NEWS STORIES often keep alive for weeks or months until readers are confused or overwhelmed by the mass of printed detail. Occasionally readers fail to grasp the true aspects of such a story when it comes to a head, because they missed the earlier developments. Typical news of this sort were the Hauptmann case before it came to trial; the Italo-Ethiopian fracas; Philippine independence and old-age security legislation.

WILLIAM C. UTLEY, whose syndicated articles appear regularly in this newspaper, analyzes each case of this kind. In a single story he presents all the facts that are essential to enable the reader to conclude for himself what the outcome should be. He covers sport as well as government, business as well as every-day life. You'll find his work anything but dull—it will often give you a chuckle.

Make Your Attic Exhale

ENGINEERS have finally admitted that many have long suspected—that the attic in summer is a highly efficient heating plant. Long after the summer sun has set, the heat from its rays, transmitted through the roof, is still maintaining temperatures in the average home that are as much as 15 degrees higher than those outside. During the day the attic hoards hot stale air and carries it over into the evening hours as an oppressive blanket which seeps through to the lower floors, interfering with comfort and sleep.

The engineer's answer has been the development of the air circulator, a relatively inexpensive device, moving vast amounts of air and turning the attic into a comfort-producing tool. This large fan literally forces the attic to breathe, pulling in fresh air and exhausting old during the day, thereby preventing stagnation. At night, when the thermometer has fallen, the circulator pulls cool air through open windows down stairs, sucks it from the attic, and exhausts it from the attic.

In an air conditioning proving home established by General Electric at Schenectady, tests were made with and without an air circulator in operation, under identical temperature conditions. For example, at 4 P.M., with an outside temperature of 100, the attic attained a reading of 120 without the circulator operating—but read only 105 when the device was working. At 8 P.M., with an outdoor temperature of 80, the circulator provided a first floor temperature of 81, five degrees below that obtained without it. At 11 P.M., when the outside thermometer registered 74, the second-floor bedroom temperature was being maintained at 78 by the circulator—nine degrees below that which would have been had the attic been transformed into a hot water asset through an application of artificial respiration.

Circus Coming To Joliet Sunday

FAMOUS GIANT GORILLA INTRODUCED BY BRING 'EM BACK ALIVE FRANK BUCK IN BIG BARNES AND SELLS-FLOTO SHOW

Gargantua The Great, the world's most terrifying living creature, makes his first appearance in this vicinity when he comes to Joliet, Sunday, July 24th, with the mighty Al G. Barnes and Sells-Floto Combined Circus now augmented with Ringling Bros. and Barnum & Bailey stupendous new features. The huge anthropoid ape, with the strength of 27 men, is exhibited at each performance in a mammoth nine-ton air-conditioned cage. This moving Alcatraz has double rows of chilled steel bars, outside of which are double thicknesses of shatter-proof plate glass. As an extra precaution guards night and day, armed with high power rifles march up and down outside the cage.

Gargantua The Great, captured natives at the age of two and traded to a sea captain is now 7 years old and stands 5 feet, 6 inches, weighs 450 pounds and has an arm stretch of over 8 feet. He is introduced to the audiences by Bring 'Em Back Alive Frank Buck, intrepid explorer who played an important part in obtaining him. For the past year Gargantua has been growing more evil tempered and now his keeper, for all the years he has watched over him, must keep outside the range of his powerful hands. Gargantua and Frank Buck, until recently the super-features of the Ringling Bros. and Barnum & Bailey organization now head the most imposing array of big top attractions ever exhibited by the Barnes Sells-Floto circus, or any other major tented amusement institution.

The great gorilla has already achieved world-wide notoriety by attacking the executive head of the show. Viewing Gargantua and meeting his gaze are experiences one will never forget. So much like a horrifying nightmare vision of what man might have been, he offers a pernicious portrait study without counterpart.

His daily diet consists of 16 bananas, 12 oranges, two heads of lettuce, several stalks of celery and three one-quart milk shakes. Once each day too he gets a half pound of calf's liver brought to the boil. This is his only meat diet. His milk shakes, which he relishes, contain chocolate flavoring, mineral oil and sometimes a little cooked rice. During the feeding of the milk shakes is the only time his keeper ever approaches near the great monster. At these feedings Gargantua grasps the bars with his huge hands and the keeper, from an ordinary milk bottle, pours the liquid refreshments down his giant throat.

Gargantua The Great is a tremendous feature and one that has caused visitors to travel hundreds of miles for a glimpse of him, but he is only one of the thousands of marvels that will be seen with the Al G. Barnes and Sells-Floto Combined Circus. Hundreds upon hundreds of world famous arenic stars and the greatest menagerie ever exhibited are likewise a part of this giant amusement colossus.

In the constellation of big stars are: Terrell Jacobs, the lion king in a startling demonstration with the world's greatest group of ferocious performing jungle-bred black-maned lions; Mabel Stark, the tiger queen, fearlessly performing with savage Royal Bengal man-killers; Reckless Ralph Clark in a sensational two-horse Roman standing jump over a standard size automobile; The Flying Concellos, absolutely fearless performers who fly like winged birds through space; the marvelous Cristiani riding family with Lucio performing a double-twisting somersault from the back of one galloping horse to another; the world-famous Rieffenach Family, with Clarence Bruce the incomparable riding comedian; William Heyer, Europe's foremost horse trainer in the most notable display of high school equestrianism ever witnessed; Naitto Troupe, wire wizards who have astonished two continents; Yoni Kam Troupe, Chinese Acrobatic marvels; Walkmir Troupe, daring high-perch wizards; Janet May, world's foremost aerial gymnast; Ann Merkel in a startling exhibition of upside-down ceiling walking; Jack Joyee, offering free running Liberty Horses in amazing evolutions, plus hundreds upon hundreds of the world's foremost circus stars and 70 world famous clowns.

An afternoon and night performance will be given at 2 and 8 p. m. To permit leisurely inspection of the vast menagerie the doors will open at 1 and 7 p. m.

Comments On Special Session

By Lottie Holman O'Neill, Representative from the 41st Senatorial District, Illinois.

The special session called for relief and which included in its call also several very controversial subjects has come to a close. Its value to the people rests chiefly upon what it failed to do rather than what it accomplished. The effort to place further taxes upon the people were completely crushed by the faction of the Democratic party opposing the Governor, assisted by the Republican minority. Cigarette tax bills, so called Use Tax bills, so called attempts to take care of gaps in the existing sales tax law, all supported by the administration and all designed to secure more revenue from the people, were wiped out. The Governor maintained that no more money should be appropriated from the state treasury for direct relief until means were provided by the legislature to replace it with additional revenue from the taxpayers. In this he was opposed by the Republican minority after it had been ascertained that such proceeding was not necessary in the light of the fact that the state is today collecting more than ever in its history.

It was brought out by the minority floor leader upon questioning of state department heads that almost twenty million dollars were in the state treasury and subject to appropriation for relief without damaging the credit of the state. This fact was also upheld by the state treasurer, Mr. Martin. The Governor attempted to bind the legislative branch in the amount of relief they should appropriate by stating in the call that it should be four and a half million. When it was found that this would not be sufficient, a bill was presented by the writer for additional funds and the point was made that the executive branch of government cannot under the Constitution control the Legislative branch. This point was ignored and the gavel was used by the Speaker Louis Lewis, Democratic candidate for State Treasurer.

to adjourn the House when objection was made to his ruling that the additional appropriation bill did not come within the first session call. It was ruled by the Lieut. Governor, John Stelle, in the Senate, that the bill was properly presented, and the senate proceeded to pass it on to third reading and over to the House.

By this time the Governor's forces realized that more funds must be made available from the state treasury, and a second special session was called to run concurrently with the first, and into this session was introduced by the Democratic side, a bill to provide a further amount for direct relief. This was passed, but because of some irregularity and haste in calling the second special, the law has now been challenged and is in the courts where further delay will be occasioned.

So up to this time the only additional funds for relief are four and one-half million for the next nine months, at the rate of five hundred thousand monthly, sixty-two percent of which will go to Chicago. This hope is expressed for additional help through Federal allotments.

Business Needs Confidence

As to relief, it should be borne in mind that no amount of appropriating by states is going to solve the problem. This is merely a sop, until such time as the Federal government is willing to encourage business to absorb the unemployed or as many as possible.

Business must be given confidence to proceed, either by assurances from the chief executive or by election of sufficient number of members to the National legislature to constitute a check on the executive branch. In the meantime of course it is necessary to continue to find money for those who cannot find work. All discussion of the relief problem should include a survey of the wider horizon in its solution.

Further on Relief, was the bill to enlarge the powers of the Relief Commission so that strict supervision could be had over local relief units. This was passed and signed, and is now in operation.

Should the commission abuse its powers granted under the bill rather than merely correct some bad conditions in a few counties, then the law will again be attacked in the regular session in January and the commission's powers cut. Those of us who believe in Home rule in the conduct of relief refuse to believe that the local officials have made a bad job of it, in most instances, and therefore do not wish to see the enemy who have done a good job, punished for the sins of a few.

The state school board which the Governor desired, was badly defeated in both houses. However, in order to secure help for needy high schools the members voted willingly for a board with limited powers to allocate the million dollars which the administration was agreeable to appropriating so that some help has been secured for high schools in the special session.

No rights of local officials have been sacrificed. The advisory board bill which was presented by Mrs. Van der Vries and the writer, was opposed by the Administration as being too weak so that it was left on the calendar. Should another attempt be made in the regular session to take over control of public education and place it in the hands of a politically appointed board, the advisory bill will again be revived.

(Concluded next week, which will take in the Driver's License and the Moran bill and other interesting notations.)

A First Food Family

Cheese has a right to its claim as one of America's First Food Families. A generous supply of cheese came over on the Mayflower, along with a live cow to provide fresh milk for the children. The ancient bill of sale for the provisioning of the Mayflower is still held by an American cheese company.

Holy Name Society Sponsors Wrestling Match July 28th

The Holy Name Society of St. Joseph's Church of Joliet are sponsoring an all-star wrestling show, Thursday evening, July 28th, at the Chamber of Commerce Arena. Every athlete in this show is one of note. Walter Shaughnessy, Joliet's sports promoter, is making the matches. The main event of the evening will bring back that Apsynian wild man King Kong in a 90 minute time limit. Altho his opponent has not been chosen men like Jim McMillen, Ralph Garibaldi, the Schnabel Bros. are all being interviewed to find the most worthy opponent for this wild man. Kong will be here in his flowing beard, shaved head and his robes of the orient. He is one of the strongest men in the business and that is why such care is being taken in selecting his opponent.

In the opener Geo. Manor, the Arabian killer, will be matched with the Chicago baker boy Rudy Kay, in what promises to be a very lively bout. Mansor is a former weight lifter and can raise 600 lbs. over his head. He challenges any athlete in the world to a weight lifting contest. In the second preliminary Bad Boy Brown will again be in our midst, this time with the Polish athlete Stanley Pulaski. Browns tactics are well known in wrestling circles, and although the fans boo him to a fare-the-well he is always welcome on any wrestling card. They like to see him in action. Brown's opponent is a new-comer to the middle west arenas and is making quite a name for himself in Chicago arenas.

Friedrich Von Schacht will return to the mat at this show after three months absence due to an injury received while wrestling; Fred claims to have pinned Bronko Naguski and has a candid picture taken at the ringside to prove it, whether that is so or not The Bronk is always busy when Von Schacht name comes up for a return match.

The German's opponent Bob Jesson is another new-comer to the mid western arenas, originally hailing from Kansas City, Mo., Bob has been doing most of his grappling on the east and west coast.

The opener will start at 8:30 p. m. and the tickets are priced at 28c, 44c, 75c, and a few specials at $1.

Plan of Operations Affects Profits of Local Farms

A well-organized plan of operation and production was responsible for a difference of $2233 in the average income of Will county account-keeping farmers last year, according to Farm Adviser L. W. Braham.

This fact is brought out in the summary which has just been returned to farmers in Will county who are co-operating in the farm-accounting project sponsored by the University of Illinois, College of Agriculture.

The 13 most profitable farms in this study had an average net income last year of $2710 a farm as contrasted with $477 for the 13 least profitable farms. Even when soil and weather conditions are comparable there are wide variations in farm incomes, Braham said.

Assisted by E. M. Hughes of the department of agricultural economics of the agricultural college, Farm Adviser Braham has returned reports to account keepers. More than 2,000 Illinois farmers are co-operating in the farm-account project which has been carried on for a quarter of a century.

The reports enable farmers to compare their efficiency with that of others farming under similar conditions and to adopt farm practices which increase income and result in a higher standard of living for the farm family.

As a result a larger crop yield an acre, and larger returns for each $100 worth of feed fed, the 13 most profitable farms had average total receipts and net increases of $4878 as compared with $2876 for the 13 least profitable farms. While the gross receipts an acre were larger on the most profitable farms by $7.02, the total operating expense an acre was $3.85 less than on the least profitable farms. The man-labor cost a crop acre averaged $6.38 on the most profitable farms and $7.63 on the least profitable. Comparable figures for power and machinery expense were $2.95 and $5.02.

Many examples are available from farm-account records of farmers who have increased their efficiency sufficiently to rise from the least profitable to the most profitable group, Braham explained.

The most marked cases of improved income are the result of a very definite and well-organized plan. Six important points are usually included in such a plan: They are: (1) a cropping system which will give the maximum income and yet allow fertility maintenance and control of erosion; (2) a livestock system adapted to the feeds produced and to the markets available; (3) the right amount of high-class labor; (4) an adequate volume of business; (5) power and machinery which will do efficient and timely work with least possible cost; and (6) a choice of enterprises which will fit well together to give a proper balance to the business as a whole.

The account keepers' report points out that the chief functions of livestock enterprises in the farm business are to utilize legumes and grasses which are so necessary for the maintenance of fertility and the control of erosion, to utilize roughage for which there is little or no sale value except through livestock and livestock products, to increase the volume of business and to make a more efficient use of labor, power and machinery than is possible where crops only are produced.

It has been found wise to have more than one major class of livestock and if possible to select those classes which are supplementary rather than competitive. Hogs and beef cattle supplement each other, while beef cattle and sheep are often competitive. On many farms which have a small volume of business it is desirable to use dairy cattle or poultry since these enterprises are intensive in nature, use relatively large amounts of labor, and contribute more income in relation to the amount of food consumed than other classes of livestock.

Copies of the report for Will county are available for any farmer who cares to call at the farm adviser's office for one.

"Saving the Nation"

By RAYMOND PITCAIRN

National Chairman
Sentinels of the Republic

Soon from every available forum and over every available wave-length, America will hear the impassioned phrases of political oratory, weighted with promises to "save the nation."

And America, as it listens to these boasts, will wonder again why the politician takes unto himself the credit for what, not he, but the American people have achieved.

For, as every citizen knows, America was founded, built and developed, not by the promises and the ambitions of officeholders, but by the toil and the strength of the people themselves.

"We, the people of the United States," is not merely the introductory phrase of our Constitution; it is the identification of the power that created and developed this nation.

And whatever the politicians may claim, America knows that:

It was "We, the people," who won our independence.

It was "We, the people," who wrote our Constitution.

It was "We, the people," who tamed and made productive the forests and mountains and plains which now constitute the United States.

It was "We, the people," who developed our fertile farms, our productive industries, our world-wide commerce.

It was "We, the people," who created and supported our great system of education and opportunity for all.

It was "We, the people," who established here the highest standard of living the world has ever known.

And on us, the people, still depend the strength, the stability, the support and the progress of the nation.

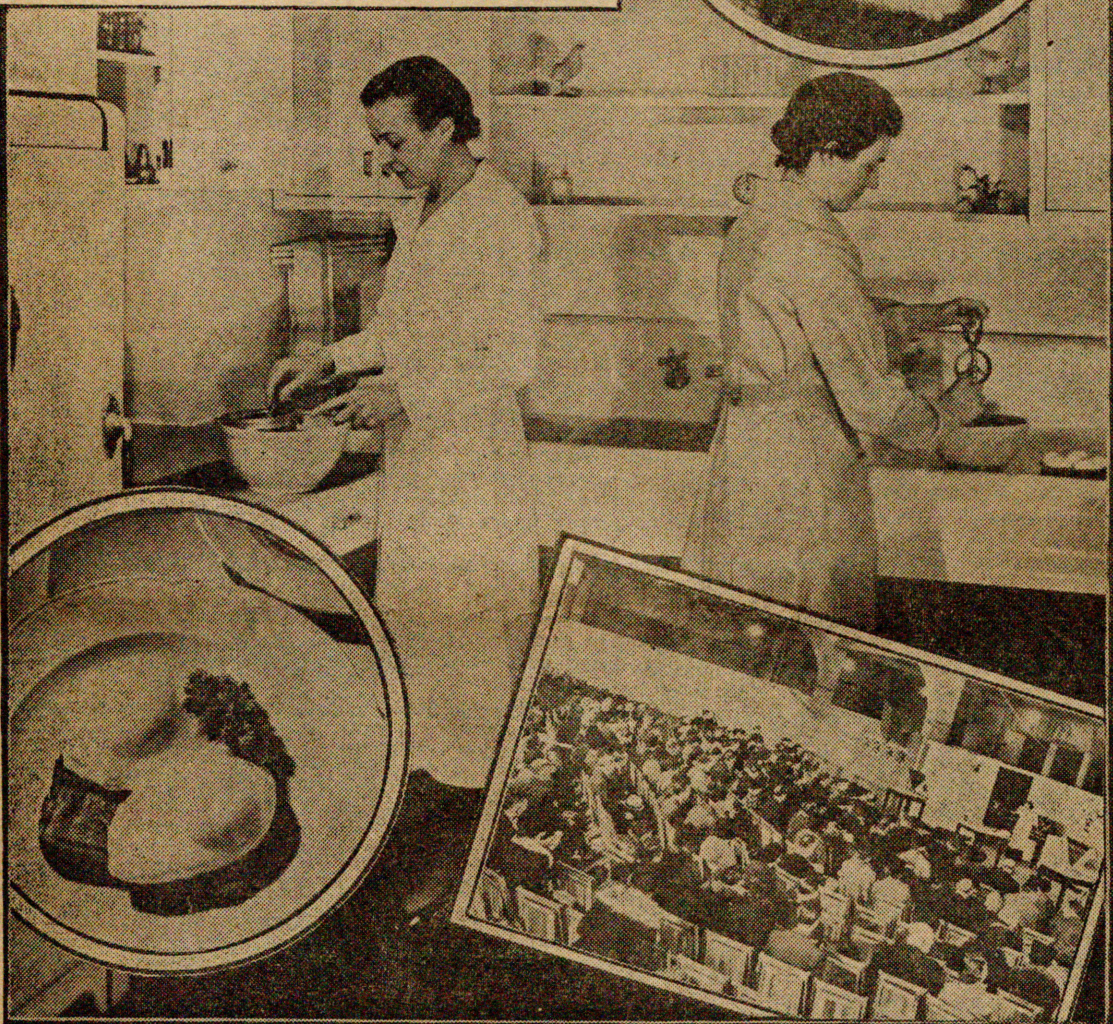

For the politicians to insist that they are the ones to thank for these things is to flout the whole spirit and history of our American form of government.

"We, the people," saved this nation in the past, and will safeguard it in the future.

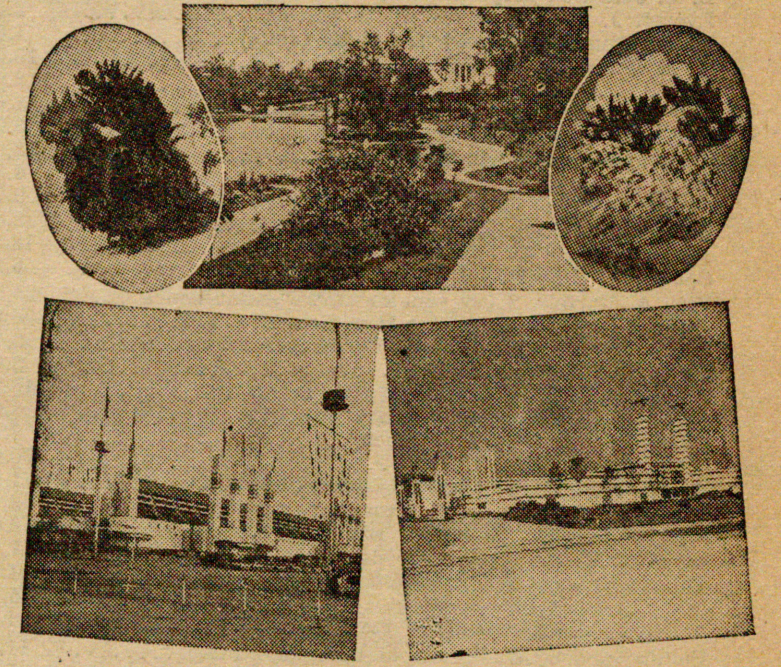

NEW RECIPES DEMONSTRATED

At World's Poultry Congress

Demonstrations and lectures on how to best use poultry products successfully in the diet will be stressed at The World's Poultry Congress, Cleveland, July 28 to August 7, 1939. Although it may be news to some people, the egg is almost a perfect food. How to use it best will be carefully brought out. The proper preparation and serving of poultry meats of all kinds will be another feature of the Congress program. Everyone who attends will have the opportunity to secure new recipes and will see these recipes demonstrated. There will be something for everyone at the Congress including the housewife.

World's Poultry Congress Scenes

Already several nations have definitely applied for exhibit space and more than thirty have announced their intention of planning an exhibit.

Factors Which Influence Hog Prices Causing Market "Ups" and "Downs"

SUPPLY is the number of hogs produced and sent to market. The above comparison shows that when the supply of hogs has been low, hog prices have usually been higher relatively than when the supply has been large. However, as the following graph shows, this is only one factor causing hog prices to fluctuate.

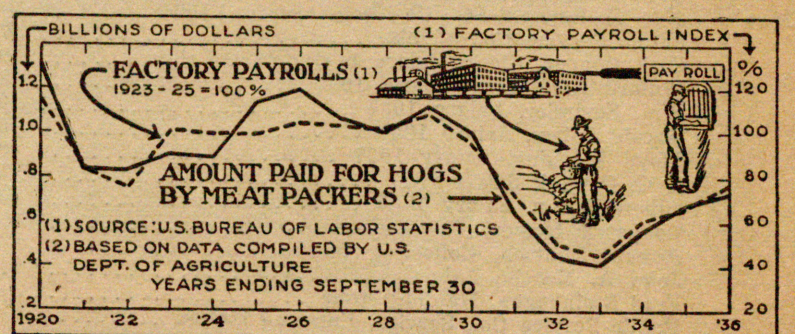

DEMAND for pork by consumers is also vitally important. The yearly comparison of factory payrolls shown above is a measure of changes in the income of all consumers and hence can be used as a measure of demand for hogs. A live hog cannot be worth any more than the amount consumers are able and willing to pay for the pork and lard the hog contains.

The comparisons in the two upper graphs show that when consumer purchasing power has remained steady, hog prices have been influenced mostly upward by decreases and downward by increases in the number of hogs produced and slaughtered, as in the years 1923-29.

They also show that when hog supplies have remained about steady, hog prices have been raised by increased purchasing power and lowered by decreased purchasing power of consumers, an example of which is shown in the years 1932-34 inclusive.

But sometimes the supply of hogs and the purchasing power of consumers fluctuate at the same time. Both of these fluctuations may be in a direction that is either favorable or unfavorable to a higher price level, or one may be in a favorable and the other in an unfavorable direction. In any event, it is the combined effect of these fluctuations that determines the price of hogs.

THE COMBINED EFFECT of these factors is visualized above, showing the amount of money paid for hogs by meat packers (hog prices multiplied by the number of pounds of hogs coming to market) and the index of consumers' income, factory payrolls.

Once the hogs have been produced the supply factor is fixed and the price is dependent upon consumer income.

New York's Fair and Skyline, All in One Picture

Note the patterns of buildings, foundations, gardens and thoroughfares emerging in the Central Exhibit Area and the fine finish of landscaping about the steelwork of the 700 foot Trylon and 200 foot Perisphere and along the broad Constitutional Mall.

Shown, right, are the elevated tracks of the IRT-BMT subway systems and, nearer, the Long Island Railroad tracks crossing the lowered Grand Central Parkway Extension. The pontoon of the plane obscures view of the Triborough Bridge, one of the main approaches to the Fair. The buildings shown are among forty already under construction.

Bugle Calls

By Zeb Potter

TEN YEARS LATER

This might have happened in Mokena, Frankfort, Tinley Park, New Lenox, or Orland Park. Any way it happened, it has happened, and will happen again. The fact that it does happen; thereby happens to hang a tale. Jack and Tom, both young, wanted to be newspaper men. They set out to learn their trade in college. Well that's all right, for some mighty fine men have been turned out and have been kicked out of colleges. The old time editors and printers, however, snort about the idea of teaching a young fellow the newspaper game out of a text book.

Jack had money, but Tom didn't. In college Jack lived well for there was the allowance coming through regularly from the "old man." For his room, Tom in winter fed coal to a furnace. No, Tom didn't go up stairs to his room after firing the furnace, for his room was in the cellar, but his hopes and ambitions did not remain in the cellar, they ascended to the attic, for some day he wanted to become the editor of a country weekly newspaper.

Parties, beautiful co-eds with fur coats, taxi cabs, and formal dances at the best hotels in the college town, that was Jack's life for four years. Oh, yes, examinations would come around, and about that time, friend Jack with an anxious look in his dark eyes, would visit Tom; or rather I should say, look Tom down, that is down in Tom's basement room, to get from Tom some information to pass a college examination. The four years in college pass by quickly. June and commencement rolled around. Pretty girls in summery frocks flitted about the campus. Mothers and fathers came from near and far to see the college president under a flat mortar board hand out the diplomas to the graduates as they stepped by to the strains of the college band.

After it was all over, Jack and Tom stood to one side, perspiring, with cap and gown on arm, and watching the crowd descend the college hill toward town.

Jack's piercing black eyes studied a bushy-tailed squirrel claw it's way up a leafy elm. At the base of the tree a dog barked impatiently to have the squirrel come down for dinner, the dog's dinner.

"Life is just like that, Tom," Jack turned to his companion. "But I've had a good time here."

Tom's honest blue eyes focused on Jack. "I've worked, that was my good time, here."

"Well, what's ahead," queried Jack? "I'm going into a small country town, and some day own a weekly," Tom answered.

"Don't be silly, why bury yourself in a village?" scoffed Jack.

"For me, it's life in a big city, on a big city daily, interviewing the big men of the nation, writing-up the murder trials. None of that country stuff for me. It's too tame!"

The two sauntered down the hill together.

Before parting, Tom spoke. "Let's meet here, ten years hence, and see how we have made out."

"It's a go. Let's shake. Thanks for helping me with the examinations. I'll see you here ten years hence to compare notes. So long, Tom."

Running a country weekly wasn't the easiest thing. A subscription list that had gone to sleep had to be woken up. Tom changed the paper over from a hand set weekly with a used type setting machine bought from a broker in Chicago. Some subscribers quit because the obituaries weren't long enough and flowery enough. Along came a circulation promoter with a sure fire scheme that couldn't fail in getting new readers, but first he needed fifty dollars to fix his car. Tom fell for that "gag" and advanced the "hot shot" fifty dollars and that was the last he saw of him and his fifty.

But Tom struggled along, got himself elected to the village school board, went to the front for a new town hall, and had the water plugs on Main Street painted red. He got himself liked and disliked in the village, and who wouldn't?

Jack in the big city worked himself up to a re-write man. The fast pace, however, was getting the best of him. His black eyes were blood shot from alcohol, and they had that hunted look when the "big sot" came around to bawl him out for some error in copy. Wine, women, and song, he had been through it all in the city.

"I wonder, how Tom is making out in the country," thought Jack, as he leaned back from his typewriter and gazed thoughtfully over the city from the skyscraper window.

"It will be ten years, this June, and I'm going back to the college re-union to check up on him."

Tom rolled up in front of the Weekly Blade and Ledger office. He looked at a copy of the weekly under his arm and said:

"Why, it's June, and I must go back to the re-union and see how Jack has made out in the big city."

The two friends met on the hill. The squirrel or rather another squirrel was up in the elm, and a hungry dog barked below. The people left the commencement scene with their proud sons and daughters.

"Just like it was ten years ago, eh, Tom?"

"Yes, Jack, just like our graduation. How have you made out, Jack?"

"Not so good, to hell with the big city news game, it's not what it is cracked up to be. How is it out in the village?"

Tom looked at the dissipated features of his companion, the bleary eyes, the red bulbous nose, and then thoughtfully answered the discouraged man.

"I'm tired of trying to make everyone happy in a small town. It just can't be done. I'd sell out today. Jack will you speak to your boss for a job for me on your daily."

"Are you nuts?", shot back Jack, quickly.

Mokena has two contrasting pieces of property on Front street, one a vertible beauty spot and the other a typical African jungle.

The first instance is that of Elmer Sippel who is to be highly commended for the very pretty floral shrubbery beauty spot, located just east of his store. Mr. Sippel has spent considerable money, time and effort in landscaping and beautifying this lot and it has been a source of enjoyment for the citizens of the village and especially, those who are lovers of nature and flowers.

Quite in contrast, a few hundred feet east of this place, is a typical African jungle on the old Stellwagon and Fisher lots. Here all kinds of weeds abound; young trees flourish, mixed with stately hollyhocks and presents a very wild appearance. The tumbled down shacks on the Stellwagon lot are an eye sore and a disgrace to the town.

This jungle has been in existence for the past two years, and it seems each summer, becomes more dense. It is too bad that an eye sore of this character should be found on the main street of the village. It makes a bad impression on strangers coming into town.

The Mokena Garden Club has also created and maintain, two beauty spots, one south of the Rock Island tracks and the other along Front street, north of the tracks. They have been very pretty this spring and summer.

Mr. and Mrs. Geo. Cooper and son George Jr., who have been visiting with relatives and friends here, returned to their home in St. Petersburg, Florida last week end. Mr. and Mrs. Fred Cappel accompanied them.

The Ladies Aid of the Mokena M. E. church and their friends, making a party of forty ladies attended a Bendix Washing Machine demonstration at the Clarence Beagley place in Orland township last Thursday evening. Following the demonstration, refreshments were served and a picnic was enjoyed. The fire place at the edge of the spacious lawn was in use in preparing some of the eats. All enjoyed a pleasant and profitable evening.

Mrs. Joseph Gee and sons are spending this week with relatives in Pontiac, Ill. Her daughters are in Chicago with their grand parents.

Elmer Cooper, Geo. Knudson, Robt. Bechstein, Peter Mancke, Mr. and Mrs. Wm. Semmler, Mrs. Henry Schevlin, Misses Velma Klose, Florence Hauck and Adeline Semmler attended a reception for Richard Lyons, Republican candidate for U. S. Senator and a number of other state candidates held in the Woodruff Hotel Monday evening.

Mr. and Mrs. Geo. Rinke and family are enjoying a vacation.

Clinton Kraus who is vacationing at Villard, Minn., writes the following interesting letter:

"Just a line to let you know that I am enjoying myself very much here in the land of lakes. I find these folks to be of a very pleasant nature and very willing to be of some service to you."

"So far I have been very successful in fishing etc., in fact, I have been having them at least twice a day."

"At the present time we are enjoying plenty of hot weather, not to say anything about the mosquitos, I must say they really are very large. On some evenings they sound like a swarm of bees when they are in flight. Last week one of the farmers caught two of the largest and put harnesses on them and by fastening two exceptionally large fire flies on the heads of the mosquitos, he is able to do his harvesting at night."

"The crops are good. There will be plenty of all small grains and also very nice corn."

LYON CARAVAN VISITS WILL COUNTY TOWNS

Lyons opened his summer trailer campaign tour here with the entire state ticket accompanying him. Having traded his previous sound truck, used while making short speaking trips during the special session of the state legislature, Lyons now has a twenty-two foot house trailer in which he will make his personal headquarters from now until the state convention at Peoria on Aug. 31st. With Lyons are Simon E. Lantz and Stephen A. Day, candidates for congressmen-at-large, William R. McCauley, candidate for state treasurer, Wiley B. Garvin, candidate for superintendent of public instruction, and George E. Lambur, Jr., candidate for clerk of the Illinois

Supreme Court. They will speak once a day for the balance of the summer but will visit as many small towns in the state as can be reached in the trailer.
"I'm tired of having the New Deal say, 'What do the Republicans offer as a program?' They complain that we do nothing but criticize the New Deal. They want us to tell them what we Republicans are going to do to put men back to work. After all, whose unemployed are they? Not ours! They are the New Deal's. It was their program which increased unemployment from 8,000,000 in 1932 to some 14,000,000 at the present time. We could, of course, wash our hands of the whole thing, refuse to confer or cooperate, like the New Deal did in 1932.

"But that isn't the Republican type of patriotism," Lyons said. "If you will look up the congressional records for the past several years, you will find that the Republican

for
Clerk of the Supreme Court

members in Congress, altho fully realizing that, due to their numerical weakness, they could hope for no success, did have a program and submitted alternative measures for every part of the New Deal program.
"We had a program then, and we have a program now. It is a common sense program. We offer to restore confidence, to revive business activity, open mills and factories and to put men and women back to work at good paying jobs. Our method is one of pure common sense and not one of reckless spending and experimentation. The New Deal tried that in 1932, again in 1934 and in 1936, and after six years is still trying to make water run up-hill.

"They ask what we offer. I'll tell you what we offer, and if the people of this country will elect 75 to 100 more Republican members to the next Congress, including six or eight more Republican Senators, the stop and go lights that have been red in front of every factory in America will turn green on November 9th and business will become active and men will go to work.

"The Republican party, when its platform is represented at the state Convention at Peoria on August 31, will show a sane, sound approach to a restoration of business activity, by taking restrictions off of business and industry, the only source of real honest-to-goodness jobs, to reemploy men and women, not at 35 to 55 dollars a month, but at 30, 40 or 50 dollars and more a week. It is Republican doctrine that men and women, shall earn living wages, guaranteed by the right of collective bargaining, and not subsist on coolie wages of the government dole.

"They say, what do we offer. I challenge them to tell us what they offer, and what they have done other than to pile up huge deficits and to waste money. They have admitted that they have no program by their very question. With their great strength in Congress, with a president who has more power and authority than any one man has ever held in governmental office in the United State in all its peace-time history, why should they worry about our program, if they had one of their own? They haven't any. They are going hit or miss, and the misses are too frequent. Men want jobs. They are sick and tired of promises," he said.

ORLAND PARK

Miss Lucille Cooper is spending this week at Cedar lake.
Mrs. J. F. Schmaedeke, Miss Adele and Marvin Schmaedeke and Mrs. Orville Schmaedeke are vacationing at Lake Tippiacoe, Indiana.
Twenty of Orland's young people went on a hay rack party Monday night. They wound up the evening with refreshments and dancing in an abandoned farm house on Chas. Cooper's property. Music was by recording. The eats consisted of hot dogs, marshmallows and pop.

Early Sunday morning constable John Helenhouse heard a number of shots fired in the vicinity of Orland Lake and upon investigation found several negroes, one of whom was armed with a 38 caliber revolver. Constable Helenhouse made the Negro surrender the gun and then got the man and his companions to leave at once. They had their auto parked near the bridge on the South West Highway.

The village board will meet in semi-monthly meeting next Monday night.

George Yunker has an interesting fishing trophy in his place of business by way of a large mounted fish head of a northern pike he caught in Arbor Vita Lake, Wisconsin June 7th. The fish weighed 7½ pounds at the time it was caught.

Harvesting is just beginning in this section and J. F. Schmaedeke McCormick-Deering dealer has had a big demand for parts of harvesting machinery.

Clarence E. Beagley has had a very good hay crop this year. He reports cutting 16 tons of timothy hay from six acres. He has just cut his second crop of alfalfa which yielded about 2½ tons to the acre. He has a fine stand of corn, some stalks being over ten feet in height.

There was a good attendance of Orland people at the German Day picnic at Frankfort last Sunday.

Sherman S. Knox is spending a two weeks vacation at home.

The R. N. A., will hold their regular meeting July 28th in the Creer hall.

Dr. Walter Schussler has returned from a fishing trip to Wisconsin.

Mr. and Mrs. Clarence E. Beagley entertained a group of forty guests of the Mokena M. E. Ladies Aid at a Bendix Washer demonstration at their place last Thursday evening. After the demonstration a lawn picnic and refreshments were enjoyed.

A new cinder walk has been laid along the Charles Rauch place.

A number of Orland property owners have expressed their interest in the building of sidewalks under the WPA plan. The actual cost to the property owner for building a new concrete walk will only be 25 cents per running foot.

Mrs. Adolph Zerbs, son Gust and daughters Hilda and Vera left last Friday on a trip to Iowa to visit with relatives.

The Davidson scale which has been located on Union street is going to be moved to a new location to make way for the proposed paving of this street.

Savings Clubs

BANKING institutions in thirty-eight states are now operating New York World's Fair 1939 Savings Clubs, according to a report just made to Grover A. Whalen, President of the Fair Corporation.

The popularity of these clubs arises from the fact that they enable individuals and families easily to finance a trip to the Fair next year through gradual accumulation of the necessary funds instead of by single demand upon financial resources. The slogan of the plan is: "Save Today to See the World of Tomorrow."

Some of the banks which have instituted the World's Fair Savings Clubs are operating them in connection with Christmas and Vacation Clubs, these having for long been in successful existence.

In one of the Southern States, such Fair clubs have been organized in colleges to aid students to set aside part of their allowances to provide means of visiting the Exposition next Spring. Banks are also utilizing the plan to encourage saving by school children.

Attendance at the Fair is expected to reach 60,000,000, according to present estimates.

Habits of Chiggers

Chiggers do not actually burrow into the skin. They attach themselves to the skin and suck blood. Although of minute size, the chigger can inject a large quantity of poisonous material into its host and this causes the persistent itching.

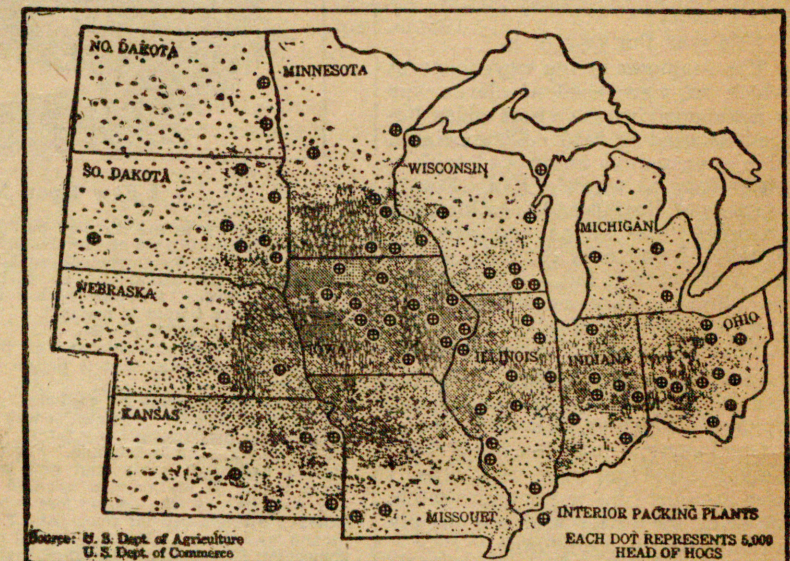

AN IMPORTANT HOME INDUSTRY

An important home industry in the form of interior packing plants and concentration point markets now absorbs a large volume of the Corn Belt hogs.

While packing plants have existed in the interior ever since the migration of corn and hogs into the Corn Belt states, their development into important meat packing centers did not begin until after the establishment of railroad transportation, refrigeration and the invention of the refrigerator car. These modern facilities for the first time made possible the slaughtering of livestock close to the point of production and the distribution of fresh and other perishable meats to distant consuming centers—in fact to all parts of the civilized world. This was a boon to the entire livestock industry as a whole, since live animals as well as meat are perishable.

HOGS ON FARMS AND INTERIOR PACKING PLANTS

Twelve Corn Belt States

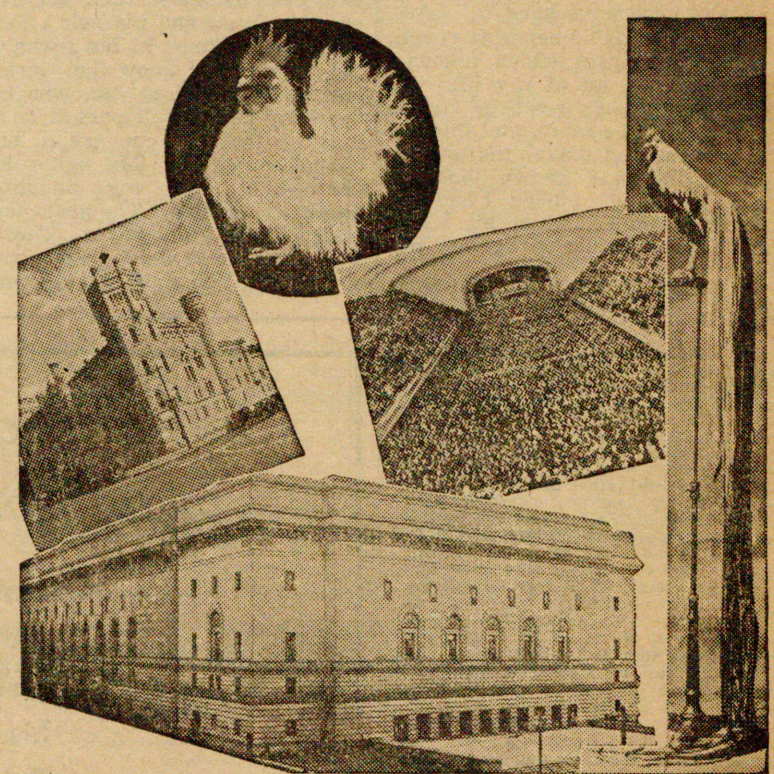

Interior packing plants have established themselves close to their source of supply of raw material—livestock. The graph above shows the density of hog population (Hogs on Farms, Census, April 1, 1930) and the location of interior packing plants in the Corn Belt States. Concentration point markets that have followed packing plants into the interior are not shown, nor are the fifteen or more central markets located in this area at converging railroad lines in the larger cities. A host of markets, nearby or more distant, available by truck or rail transportation, now await the choice of the producer who has livestock to sell.

A second great impetus to this development of interior meat packing came during the last decade with the development of hard-surfaced roads and truck transportation of livestock. This new and additional form of transportation has made the interior packing plant and concentration point markets more readily available to a much larger number of producers than formerly, and, consequently, a larger volume of livestock has been sold in recent years to these nearby markets.

Under the present marketing set-up which these and other economic changes have brought about, the producer now has a wider choice of markets than ever before. Now he can sell and deliver less than a carload, or less than a truckload, or even just one animal to any one of several packing plants and concentration points available, or consign to a central market. More than ever before producers are now in a position to decide what method of selling livestock and what type of market they prefer.

World's Poultry Congress Comes to the U. S. A. for the First Time

The World's Poultry Congress which meets every third year comes to Cleveland, Ohio, July 28 to August 7, 1939. This is the first meeting ever held in the United States and probably those active in the poultry industry will all be gone before it comes back again. About 60 nations usually participate in the Congress. Every operation in the industry from nest to table will be shown. Every known breed of fowl will be on display. Scientists from all parts of the world will participate. Over 20 acres under roof will be utilized to house the exhibits. The building upper left in the above picture is the Hall of Youth for the junior activities. Also is shown the Cleveland Public Auditorium, exterior and interior, where many meetings will be held and where part of the exhibit will be housed. The two visitors shown are a Polish fowl and a Japanese long tailed chicken. A membership costing only $1.00 entitles the visitor to attend eleven days of this Congress. These memberships must be bought in advance.

CHAPTER I

I became a beggar when I was twenty-two.

The blow was as heavy as swift, for till then I had always been given the best that money could buy. From the day I was born I had wanted for nothing at all, and, though my parents were dead, I had never been led to expect any other estate. And then, one fair June morning, when the sills of the windows of Oxford were gay with flowers, I learned that my sole trustee had gambled my fortune away.

By the help of the Head of my College, I soon obtained work in London for which I was paid just 35 shillings a week, and though I believe that I might have done better than that, in my efforts to rise I met with so much unkindness that I presently withdrew from a battle for which I was ill equipped.

I had another reason for staying in Red Lead Lane.

I had a companion in misfortune—a man of some fifty summers, who, too, had seen better days. His name was Matthew Gering—or so he said: for though he looked English enough, his speech sometimes betrayed an alien blood. That he was of gentle birth was unmistakable and I think that he may have been gifted—till misery dulled his wits. He seemed the better for my coming to share his lot, and after two or three months I moved to the humble lodging at which he had lived by himself for 13 years. It was soon after this that I knew that I could not leave him, if only for pity's sake.

This was the way of it.

The manager of the warehouse at which we were used as clerks was a man upon whose vitals class hatred seemed to feed. Disappointed of bigger game, he preyed with a bitter fury on what he had. For 15 years poor Gering had been his butt, enduring "the slings and arrows" of what I can only describe as "a mind diseased"; but my arrival did something to take the strain, for he had to divide his attentions if I was to have my share of inhumanity.

And so I stayed where I was for nearly two years, when two things happened together, to set me free.

One gusty April morning poor Gering could not rise, and when I had brought him a doctor, against his will, the latter told me plainly that he was a dying man.

"He has no resistance," he said. "A chill could have put him out—and this is congestion of the lungs."

Of course I did what I could, but when I came back from my work on the following day, I knew at once that Gering had seen his last dawn. And so did he.

"Not very long now, Exon," he said quietly . . .

It must have been near ten o'clock, and we had spoken no word for nearly an hour, when he put a hand under the blankets and drew out a sheet of foolscap, folded in four.

"I would like you to read this," he said. "I wrote it down years ago. But no one has ever read it. It—it would not have been well received. I have even considered all day whether I should show it to you—you who have done so much for a broken man. You see, I am like a dog that has been ill used for so long that he is suspicious of kindness and ready to bite the hand that makes to caress his head."

With his words he began to cough, and the paroxysm which followed frightened me out of my life. At least five minutes went by before the seizure had passed, and this left him so weak and shaken that even a child would have known that the end was at hand. Indeed, I had forgotten the paper, when his trembling fingers thrust it against my sleeve.

I sat back on my heels and read the following words.

My true name is Rudolf Elbert Virgil and I am the ninth Count of Brief—an ancient Austrian House. My mother died when I was three. Her only other child was my twin-brother, born an hour after myself. He was, as they say, a bad hat. In 1910 I married an English girl and a daughter was born to us in 1912. We lived with my father at Brief, which stands to the east of Innsbruck, from which it is distant a hundred and twenty miles. In the spring of 1914 my father received some news from the English police. My twin-brother was under arrest on a charge of forgery. I left for England that night to see what could be done. Arrived in London, I sought a solicitor, and, on my going surety, my brother was admitted to bail.

The case was unanswerable. And from what the solicitor said it was perfectly clear that if Ferdinand stood his trial, he would be sent to prison for several years. When we were at last alone, my brother fell on his knees and begged me in the name of our mother to help him to make his escape. Like a fool, I agreed to do so.

The day was Thursday. Early on Friday I left my brother in my rooms and went out to make arrangements for him to leave. All I did, I did surreptitiously. A ship was to sail for South America at noon on the following day. I booked his passage in an assumed name. I procured him an outfit and had the things sent on board. That evening I returned to my rooms to tell him that all was well. A telegram from Brief was awaiting me. My father and wife were both dead. They had been killed that day . . . in a car . . . on the Innsbruck road. The news stunned me. As a man in a dream, I did as my brother said, for now it was I that was helpless and he that took charge. All I knew was that I must get back . . .

That night he packed for me and told me what he had done. I was to leave the next day by the two-o'clock train. He had arranged everything. All that I had to do was to go to the Bank the next morning and draw for him the money which he was to have. That he dared not do, though I gave him my check. And when I had drawn the money—500 pounds—I was to bring it to the station from which his train would be leaving at half-past ten.

As he said, so I did. I had no brain to argue. The only thing I could see was the Innsbruck road.

They arrested me on the platform . . . They thought I was Ferdinand. I do not blame them at all. You see, he was my twin-brother. Only my wife and my father could tell us apart. And they were dead.

When they searched me, they found the money—and Ferdinand's ticket for the ing your steps. And when you have . . .

And that was as far as he got.

For a moment the poor jaws worked. And then the head fell sideways and the body went slack in my arms.

So died the ninth Count of Brief. And the secret of his House with him.

Two days later I learned that an uncle of whose existence I had been hardly aware had recently died in Australia, leaving me all he had. And he was a very rich man.

Though my adversity lasted no more than a short two years, it would have been strange indeed if it title would pass to his daughter, the Lady Elizabeth Virgil, now twenty-four years old. The dreadful injustice, therefore, was over and done: it had in fact come to an end with Gering's death; and though the wicked flourished, the good was beyond his reach.

And then a strange thing happened.

Summer was coming in, and I had been out in my car for the whole of the day. I entered my rooms in the evening, to bathe and change, when I saw upon my table an envelope covering something, but not addressed. Opening this, I found a passport within—and knew at once that some servant had made a mistake. A guest had arrived from abroad and the office had asked for his passport, from which to fill up the form which the police required. And now it had been returned—to me, instead of to him.

The passport was that of Percy Elbert Virgil, born in London in 1910, and domiciled at Brief. And the face was the face of a clever, unscrupulous blackguard, with as close-set a pair of eyes as ever I saw.

I sent the passport back to the office, lighted a cigarette and sat down to think things out.

Unknown to Gering, before he had been arrested, his brother had had a son. That son was now twenty-six and dwelled in his father's house. And father and son were both evil. How did the Lady Elizabeth fare between two such wolves?

Her position was ugly. I mean, she stood in the way.

I began to feel ill at ease.

It was, of course, none of my business. I happened to know the truth, but that was all. Gering had made no request: he had simply told me his tale. But then he had not been aware that his brother had a child of his own; and he had not expected that I should ever be free. For all that, it was none of my business.

I put out my cigarette and began to change.

Even if I made it my business, what could I do? It had never entered my head to doubt the truth of the statement which Gering had made. But how on earth could I prove it? By declaring the existence of some secret I did not know? By alleging the existence of a doorway "which no one would ever find"? The thing was absurd. I had no proof. Gering himself had done nothing, because he had known very well that there was nothing to be done. And yet . . .

boat. Unknown to me, he had put this into my pocket—to gain his terrible ends. And he had left for Innsbruck whilst I was still at the Bank. By an earlier train, of course. He was across the Channel before I went to my cell.

So he and I changed places.

He took my father's title and all that was mine, and I was sent to prison for seven years.

My daughter became his daughter, my life became his life. You see, it was so easy. Only my wife and my father had known why I went to England. For the rest, I had gone away and now had come back. If my manner seemed in any way strange, the double loss I had suffered was blamed for that. And Ferdinand was careful. He even denied my check for 500 pounds. He said that I had forged it . . .

Seven years is seven years. By the time I came out of jail, my cause, which had always been hopeless, was dead and buried as though it had never been. So I changed my name and sought work—I had to have bread.

That is my story. I cannot prove it, of course. I can only say it is true. M. G.

As I folded the paper, the dying man caught at my arm.

"Do you believe it?" he whispered.

"Every word, sir," said I. "I wish you had told me before."

"Listen. I say in that statement that I have no proof. But I have. I have always had it—a proof that I could not use."

Shaking with excitement, poor Gering raised himself up, and, since it seemed best not to thwart him, I put my arm about him to lend him strength.

"The House of Brief has a secret—which has passed from time immemorial from father to son. Only two persons know this: and they are the Count and his heir. Ferdinand cannot know it: but I who was the first-born—I know the secret of our House. And to you, who have been my son, I will pass it on. It may be that you can use it, but I cannot see so far. My rights, Elizabeth—that was my daughter's name . . . Listen. The great tower of Brief—the great tower. There is a doorway there which no one would ever find. You must go up, count-had not altered my outlook for good and all. I had settled down in a very pleasant manor, which had been a famous seat, but was now a hotel.

It must not be thought that I had forgotten Gering or the statement of his which I held. I remembered him constantly, and more than once I wondered if it was not for me to take action upon the facts which I knew. And then it always seemed best to let sleeping dogs lie. I had looked up the House of Brief and had found two things—first, that the pseudo-Count was still a widower and, secondly, that on his death the

London Glassworks Three Centuries Old, Uses the Same Methods as Before Christ

Just outside London is a factory where glass is blown in substantially the same way as it was 3,000 or 4,000 years before Christ, writes a London correspondent in the Boston Globe.

Until 15 years ago the Whitefriars Works, so-called because of the district in which they operated, were in Tudor street, a narrow thoroughfare running parallel to Fleet street. They had been there since the year after the Great fire of 1666.

February 23, 1669, Samuel Pepys on his birthday went to the duke of York's playhouse, "and there, finding the play begun went homeward to the Glass house, and there showed my cousins the making of glass and had several things made with great content, and, among others, I had one or two singing-glasses made, which make an echo to the voice, the first that ever I saw; but so thin that the very breath broke one or two of them."

The same firm will still blow you such glasses today. The new premises resemble those described in Sixteenth and Seventeenth century treatises on glass blowing, and in front of them flourishes a fig tree grown from a cutting taken from outside the Tudor street building.

The finest English glass, which in the Eighteenth century was the envy of all Europe, is flint glass. The ingredients are sand, red lead, potash and saltpeter, with smaller quantities of borax and arsenic. For hand-blown glass, only sand from the forest of Fontainebleau is used, as it has been used for generations.

In the barn-like room where the actual glass is blown, the men are grouped around fires, and each center is called a "chair," from the chair in which the glassblower sits. The chief blower is called the gaffer, and he is helped by the servitor and the boy.

Around the "chairs" the blowers go, to and from the blaze, holding in their hands long tubes at the end of which are "blobs" of molten glass. The men twirl fine glasses until they become perfect wine glasses or jugs.

In another room cutting is done, and in another is a museum of various rare pieces made in those works throughout the centuries.

Frosting a Cake for Judges to Sample

A professional cake baker, frosting one of the hundreds of cakes which were made up in the Experimental Kitchen Laboratory, maintained by C. Houston Goudiss in New York City, in the course of selecting the winners in his recent Cake Recipe Contest.

By C. HOUSTON GOUDISS

NATURALLY, I am accustomed to seeing exhibits of delicious and interesting foods in the Experimental Kitchen Laboratory that I maintain in New York City. But in all the years of its existence, it has never been a busier nor a more inviting place than during the last few weeks when the home economists on my staff have been busily testing and judging the many fine cake recipes submitted by readers of this paper in our recent Cake Recipe Contest.

Imagine, if you can, a big cheerful and colorful kitchen filled with long tables upon which row after row of handsome cakes were arranged—proudly testifying to the skill of the homemakers who cherish the recipes from which they were made.

Every Type of Cake Entered.

A whole tableful of white cakes, with and without icing. Chocolate and cocoa cakes of every possible type. All manner of cakes, fragrant and delicious—spice, ice cream, honey, caramel, maple syrup, nut, date, pineapple, orange, lemon, butterscotch, jam, banana, raisin, oatmeal, coconut and marble cakes. Cakes baked in long sheets, square cakes, round cakes, layer cakes. Old-fashioned cakes from grandmothers' recipe books. Very modern and up-to-date cakes. And even one that was said to have been a favorite with General Robert E. Lee. I've never seen anything to compare with the collection, even at the biggest State Fair!

Do you wonder that the home economists on my staff required several weeks to pick the winners? For with such a wealth of exceptional cakes from which to choose, selecting those for top honors, was indeed difficult.

The cake bakers were trained for their work. They followed the recipes precisely. They measured accurately. They checked oven temperatures.

The scoring system was highly scientific. And we can say with conviction that no matter how close the race, the winners definitely outpointed even their closest rivals.

First Prize Winner.

The first prize of $25.00 went to Mrs. D. F. Kelly, 1004 Charles St., Whitewater, Wis.

Honorable Mention.

Emogene Williams, Damon, Texas; Mrs. Simon Moen, Norma, N. D.; Mrs. Dick Collins, Masonville, Iowa; Mrs. B. F. Herman, Box 1118, Crosby, Miss.; Mrs. Paul Lorenz, P. O. Box 225, Strathmore, Calif.; Mrs. S. S. Arant, Simpson, Nev.; Mrs. Vida Hilger, Box 257, Rockland, Mich.; Mrs. Grace H. Peterson, Box 335, Amherst, Wis.; Mrs. Cecil Skinner, Bedford, Wyo.; Mrs. Joe Furnace, 317 West Twentieth St., South Sioux City, Neb.

My thanks and my compliments to every homemaker who submitted a recipe. I only regret that everyone who submitted a recipe could not win a prize.

'Robin Hood' Is Favorite of Children

By ELIZABETH C. JAMES

PERHAPS the first time that you met Robin Hood and his Merry Men, you were a little child and were in bed with the measles. Perhaps your mother sat by the window where a ray of light permitted her to read to you from the stories of Robin Hood. Anyway, you certainly remember Robin's fight with Little John.

One summer's day Robin Hood and his Merry Men stopped their journey in the forest to rest in the shade. Their leader set out to move the woods alone, taking his horn which he used to summon his men should he need them.

Going along gayly Robin found himself over a rushing river on a narrow log bridge, face to face with a man seven feet tall. Hot words passed between them for neither would go back to allow the other to pass first. Pulling an arrow from his sheaf and placing it to his long bow, Robin prepared to end this argument, but the tall man taunted him with the name of coward.

"Do you not see me unarmed except for a staff?" cried his opponent. "And yet you would use your bow."

Robin left the bridge and cut himself a stout cudgel from a tree. Returning he faced the tall man and they began to fight, both balancing on the narrow log.

Robin Hood Falls.

A blow from Robin's staff seemed to shiver the bones of the other, but a quick stroke nearly cracked the crown of Robin's head. Thus they were struggling, hand to hand, when a dextrous stroke from the stranger tumbled Robin Hood into the water. Pulling himself from the river by the overhanging boughs of a bush, Robin gave a mighty blast on his horn. Running at top speed came his band of Merry Men in their liveried suits of green. Seeing their leader wet from head to foot, they asked the reason, and when Robin told them of the fight they beset the stranger to give him a duking.

"Stop!" cried Robin Hood. "If this brave man will join us, he can become a member of the Merry Men!"

Shouts greeted these words, and the tall man agreed to accept this

ABOUT THE AUTHORS

The authors of the Robin Hood stories are unknown as individuals but much can be deduced about them as a group. They hated the rich Normans who had taken the best of everything in England, they hated many of the churchmen who taxed the people excessively in the name of religion. Robin Hood was their champion for he robbed the rich and helped the poor. What King Arthur was to the nobility, Robin Hood was to the poor.

The deeds of Robin Hood have come down to us in ballads which were told and sung by the evening camp fires, long before the people could read or write.

invitation, having heard much of Robin Hood's men.

"We must have a feast in his honor," they cried and set about preparing the venison and wines.

And so it was that on a summer's day in their secret haunt in Sherwood Forest, Robin and his Merry Men took Little John to be one of their band.

Another day Robin Hood heard of an archery tournament which he very much wished to win. Wearing a disguise he entered the contest and was soon left with only one opponent, a slender youth who shot with grace and skill. When the last round came, Robin stepped back to give first place to his opponent, who in turn gave way to Robin Hood. Then the outlaw saw that the hands of his opponent were trembling. So Robin Hood stepped to the mark and shot his arrows, making a perfect score. The youth missed the center of the target by a small margin.

It was then time to remove disguises. When the villagers saw Robin Hood they were astonished for they knew that the Sheriff of Nottingham was searching for him. At this very moment the Sheriff dashed up on his horse and a free-for-all fight began. The villagers helped Robin Hood for they loved him as a hero. In the confusion Robin noticed the slender youth beside him, fighting in his defense.

When the fight was over, Robin sought out the youth and inquired why he had fought thus in his behalf. The youth removed his disguise and his cap; beautiful long hair fell to his shoulders. Robin gasped, for the slender youth was really Maid Marian, Robin's sweetheart.

Robin Hood and his sweetheart rode away together, leaving the villagers smiling.

GIDEON: FOLLOWING GOD'S PLAN

LESSON TEXT—Judges 7:4-7, 15-23.
GOLDEN TEXT—Have not I commanded thee? Be strong and of a good courage. Joshua 1:9.
PRIMARY TOPIC—Why Gideon Won.
JUNIOR TOPIC—Gideon's Band.
INTERMEDIATE AND SENIOR TOPIC—The Lord's Three Hundred.
YOUNG PEOPLE AND ADULT TOPIC—A Wise General.

Who is he? What are his connections? How large an organization does he represent? These are the measures of the greatness of a man which are common in the world. Even in religious circles there is a seeking for the men with "big names" when something is to be done. Our lesson for today reiterates the principle which we all know but which we practice so little, namely, that whatever is accomplished that is really worth while is done by God and that He uses only humble instruments—the "foolish things," the "weak things," the "base things," and "things which are despised" (I Cor. 1:26-29). No flesh is to have any opportunity to glory in His presence. If men who are accounted great by this world are useful to God it is only because they are themselves humble in spirit and service.

Gideon came from an obscure family in a small tribe in Israel—and was astonished when God called him (Judges 6:15). He asked God for several signs to assure him that he was the chosen instrument of the Lord (read Judges 6), but once he was certain he went forward, nothing doubting.

I. An Insignificant Army (vv. 4-7). At first thought it seems almost foolish to comment on this story of repeated reductions in the size of Gideon's army in these hectic days when the nations of the earth are living for but one objective—to create a fighting machine bigger and more fully manned than that of any other nation.

But on second thought it is just the time for such comment, because what the nations are doing is a perfect example of the hopeless philosophy of men, while what Gideon did is a presentation of God's way. These notes are being prepared in a city distant from the writer's home, where he is attending a conference of national leaders in a field of great and international importance. A long session just concluded was addressed by a number of brilliant and capable men and women—and the conclusion they reached was that America was a badly befuddled nation, lost without a sense of direction in a wilderness of incoherent and inherently contradictory theories and about to lose its dearly bought freedom, unless someone points the way out. The only solutions offered were bigger and better human programs, and when a suggestion was made that our need might be spiritual the discussion was promptly directed in another direction.

We need the lesson today that it is by the seemingly insignificant Gideon's band that victory is to be obtained. Take courage, ye 300, rid yourselves of the 22,000 fearful ones, let God sift out the 9,700 who are not alert to the danger of the enemy, and then, under some Gideon who is obedient to the command of God, go forward to victory. You are the hope, and the only hope of our nation. Do not fail God in this crucial hour.

II. Obedience to God's Command (vv. 15-23).

After the Lord had encouraged the heart of Gideon by the account of the dream of the Midianite (vv. 8-14), he and his band are sent forward with strange weapons and even stranger instructions.

It is not ours to question "Why?" when God tells us to move forward. When will we learn that He knows more than we do, and that obedience is all we need to render unto Him? "Behold, to obey is better than to sacrifice, and to hearken than the fat of rams" (I Sam. 15:22).

III. The Sword of the Lord and of Gideon (vv. 18, 20).

While some folk err in counting the Lord out and making everything depend on man, there are a few who make the opposite error and become fatalistic in spirit and relatively useless to both God and man—because they hold an improper view of the manner in which the Lord works through human agencies.

A man who objected to soul-winning efforts, and especially personal work, said that he believed "God could save a man if he were alone on the top of the Alps." Of course He could, but God does not ordinarily work that way. It is the "sword of the Lord"—yes, but do not forget that it is "the sword of the Lord and of Gideon." God has graciously condescended to do His work on earth through human agencies. Let us be ready and subservient instruments for His use, but let us at the same time be alert and active in His service. The two are not at all inconsistent, in fact the one whom God chooses to use is usually the one who is already busy about His work.

Men of the Mounted

by Captain
G. Elliott-Nightingale

A GORILLA VS. A HALF-PINT MOUNTIE

A MORE contemptible black-guard never lived than "Bully" R—. He was everything despicable and stood suspected of just about every crime in the Dominion calendar from murdering Indians on hinterland trails, to kicking a child out of his path. He stood about six foot even, and weighed about 250 pounds, all of it muscle, sinew, and unadulterated meanness. He was a big, strong, giant of a man, and he knew it, and he was always picking on someone half his size. He was a handsome devil, to boot, although he wasn't quite so handsome when, one fine morning in northern Ontario, he attacked the writer of this epistle and had an ax-handle wrapped around his head for his trouble.

Of all his tremendous stock of mean tricks and criminal pastimes, however, there were two that caused even the most hardened and capable wilderness men to gasp and keep out of "Bully" R's clutches. One of his pastimes was that of honing his two-pound hand-axe until it had an edge like a razor. Then he would throw it at the first dog that chanced to come within forty or fifty feet. Moreover, "Bully" R. seldom missed. With an axe, he was a marksman, and as his favorite two-pounder whizzed through the air, witnesses knew they were looking at a dead dog.

Another of his most despicable tricks was to pick a quarrel with some fire ranger, surveyor, timber-cruiser or lumberjack, or prospector who might stand about five foot eight or ten and weigh about one hundred and fifty or sixty pounds. He might start an argument over anything at all, and then, instead of using his fists and fighting like a man, he would close in on his victim, grab him by the collar and also by the belt, or seat of the pants, and then lift the struggling victim up at arm's length over his head. This was quite easy work for "Bully" R. for he had the build and strength of a grizzly bear.

At any rate, having raised his man above his head, he would let out a bellow and begin moving rapidly toward the nearest big tree, probably a hemlock with a diameter of about three feet. Then, when but a few feet away he would throw his victim at the tree, and he crippled a few men before others were wise enough to keep out of his clutches by any means possible. This writer used a nice maple ax-handle, and escaped injury, but a few others were not so fortunate. At any rate, "Bully" R. went on for some considerable time and he was just about due for assassination either by Indian or white, when he conceived the idea of heading to the Canadian Northwest to work during the harvest season there. Special harvester's excursions were running about every ten days or so, and finally "Bully" R. left the train at a flag-station in a district near Saskatoon, in Saskatchewan.

A dozen other harvesters alighted at this point, too, and they pitched camp alongside the railroad track, planning to camp until they hired out, which might be next day. At any rate, the first thing that caught "Bully" R's attention was a rather fine looking husky dog, evidently a sled dog. Not having his two-pound ax handy, "Bully" called and coaxed the more or less friendly dog to come to him, and just as the unsuspecting animal got close, "Bully" R's right foot shot out like a piston rod and the dog went sailing through the air, to fall dead ten or twelve feet away. Just at that particular moment a Man of the Mounted appeared, seemingly from nowhere, but in time to witness "Bully" R's fatal footwork. Not more than five foot six, and weighing less than 150 pounds, the Man of the Mounted walked right up to "Bully" R. and arrested him for killing a dog worth $50, and also cruelty to an animal that was absolutely friendly and had not attacked. "Bully" threw his shoulders back, took a deep breath, and in a flash he had grabbed the Man of the Mounted and was raising his load up high. In mid-air, the Man of the Mounted broke loose and came down astraddle the "Bully" R's shoulders and back. Then something happened. The Mountie's hands were seen to be doing something to a spot somewhere behind "Bully" R's left ear, and all of a sudden "Bully" R. went down in a limp heap. Before he could recover, the man of the Mounted had the handcuffs on him, and the "Bully" for the first time in his life was a prisoner, and helpless. Not a blow had been struck. Moreover, the Man of the Mounted didn't even muss his hair or lose his hat. It all happened just like that. Later, it was learned that the lightly built Man of the Mounted knew just about all there was to know about jujitsu. Pressure on certain nerves in "Bully" R's gorilla-like neck had caused him to crumple. At any rate, quite a few of "Bully" R's old crimes were dug up and the Canadians gave him several years to think things over.

Brute strength versus science, and science won hands down.

WHAT to EAT and WHY

C. Houston Goudiss Offers Practical Advice on How to

Keep Cool With Food

By C. HOUSTON GOUDISS

6 East 39th Street, New York City.

FROM the standpoint of health, the summer months constitute the most important period of the entire year. They should be used to build stamina and vitality that will fortify your body against disease. But to many people, the warm weather means merely a succession of exhausting days and restless nights. And hardly a week passes without reports of heat prostrations.

Meeting the Challenge of Hot Weather

While abnormal heat or humidity may be a secondary cause, the real reason behind much warm-weather suffering is a failure to meet the challenge of summer with a judicious diet.

Automobile owners know that no car is better than its engine, and in warm weather, careful drivers watch the gauge on the dashboard to be sure the engine does not become overheated. But most people give little thought to that most remarkable of all engines—the human digestive machinery.

Compared to the engine in your body, the one in your car is a crude, rough affair that can stand no end of punishment. Moreover, the automobile is driven for a certain length of time and then permitted to rest. But the marvelous mechanism which transforms your food into blood, bone, muscle, and your capacity for thought and action is never wholly at rest.

Importance of the Right Food

If the automobile engine requires special attention, how much more important to stoke your body engine with food suited to the weather!

No one would think of going about in midsummer wearing the same garments that were worn all winter. Yet many women continue to serve the same type of meals which were required to keep the body warm in winter. Such a practice is sure to make you miserable. But more than that, it lowers resistance and may, therefore, lead to illness.

Beating the Heat

There are several factors to bear in mind when planning the hot-weather diet. The first secret of keeping cool is to supply the body machinery with food fuel that can be utilized with the least expenditure of energy.

Warm weather is responsible for muscular relaxation in the digestive tract, as well as other parts of the body. And you run the risk of digestive upsets, with their discomfort and health hazards, unless you make every effort to lessen the work of your digestive system.

Eat lightly of rich fatty meats, pastries, rich cakes, sauces and gravies. At all times, choose easily digestible foods.

Overeating Saps Vitality

Don't overeat. The task of handling excess food is a burden to the body at any season. In hot weather, it will cause the body temperature to mount along with the thermometer, and may result in a serious upset. It is also advisable to cut down somewhat on the quantity of heat and energy producing foods consumed—that is the carbohydrates and fats.

Need for Body-Building Foods

The protein requirement remains the same summer and winter. Some people think that meat should not be eaten in summer, or should be reduced to a minimum. But there is no closed season for growth in children, and moreover, they play so constantly and indulge in such strenuous exercise that they break down body tissue very rapidly. Adults also have a constant need for protein to rebuild the millions of cells that are worn out daily.

It is desirable, however, to avoid rich, fatty meats and to select protein foods that are more easily digestible, as chicken, lamb, lean beef and lean fish. Special emphasis should be placed on milk, cheese and eggs. These splendid foods not only supply Grade A protein, in an easily digested form, but also fortify the diet with minerals and vitamins.

Liquids Essential

To help you keep cool, the summer diet must include an abundance of liquids. These are necessary to make up for the large amounts of moisture lost from the body through increased perspiration.

Liquids may be taken in the form of milk, fruit juices and cooling drinks made from pure water and packaged beverage crystals containing dextrose, fruit acid, flavoring and coloring.

Hot Weather and Vitamin C

Two European investigators recently found that exposure to high temperatures causes a 50 per cent loss in vitamin C from the body tissues. And lowered vitamin C reserves are partially responsible for that tired feeling so often experienced in warm weather. Their research indicates that drinking orange or lemon juice, which are rich in vitamin C, actually helps to mitigate the effect of the heat.

Choose Cold Drinks Carefully

A cold drink is comforting on a hot day. And in addition, sweetened beverages help to relieve fatigue, for their carbohydrate content supplies available energy. Sugar is the least heating of the energy producing foods, for less than one-sixteenth of the energy it supplies to the body is converted into heat. The rest goes into brain and muscle power.

Therefore, one good way to prevent needless fatigue in summer is to take a cool, moderately sweetened drink whenever you feel tired during the day. This will satisfy thirst and ward off exhaustion like a rest by the road after a long hard tramp.

Too highly sweetened beverages, however, may be heating to the body, though they are cooling to the palate. For this reason, it is advisable for homemakers to mix their own cool drinks so that they can control the amount of sweetening used. It is possible to buy inexpensive packaged beverage crystals in a variety of flavors, which make delicious, refreshing and cooling drinks for general family use. One of these contains added vitamin D, and as the sugar is added by the homemaker, you can be the judge of how much to use. This is an excellent idea, especially in households where there are children, for the home-made drink satisfies thirst, provides needed energy and discourages them from buying bottled beverages of doubtful purity.

Cooling Foods

I offer free to readers of this column a new bulletin containing a list of cooling foods, plus practical, specific advice in planning the warm weather diet. There are also menus showing how easily you can KEEP COOL WITH FOOD.

Simple, Keep-Cool Cottons

crepe are good fabric choices for this frock.

The Home Frock.

This is a diagram design, that you can finish in a few hours, and oh my, how you'll enjoy it! The sleeves, cut in one with the shoulders, are so easy to work in, the soft collar, with the little tab, is so becoming. Best of all, this design is cleverly darted at the waistline in a way that makes you look much, much slimmer than you are. Make this of gingham, percale, handkerchief lawn or calico. In tub silk it will be appropriate for home afternoons, too.

The Patterns.

1537 is designed for sizes 12, 14, 16, 18 and 20. Size 14 requires 3 3/4 yards of 35 inch material with short sleeves.

1395 is designed for sizes 36, 38, 40, 42, 44, 46, 48, 50 and 52. Size 38 requires 3 3/4 yards of 35 inch material; contrasting collar (if desired) takes 5/8 yard cut bias.

Send your order to the Sewing Circle Pattern Dept., Room 1020, 211 W. Wacker Dr., Chicago, Ill. Price of patterns, 15 cents (in coins) each.

Making Friends

Blessed are they who have the gift of making friends, for it is one of God's best gifts. It involves many things, but above all, the power of going out of one's self, and appreciating whatever is noble and loving in another.—Thomas Hughes

The HOUSEWIFE... "RESEARCH PROFESSOR OF ECONOMY"

SHE'S not a Ph.D. or an LL.D. She hasn't a diploma or a cap and gown. Her research is not done in the laboratory or the library. As a matter of fact, her findings are made, usually, in the street car, in the subway, in the suburban commuter's train.

She reads the advertisements in this paper with care and consideration. They form her research data. By means of them she makes her purchases so that she well deserves the title of "Research Professor of Economy." She discovers item after item, as the year rolls on, combining high quality with low.

It is clear at once that all who make and keep a home have the same opportunity. With the help of newspaper advertising you, too, can graduate from the school of indiscriminate buying into the faculty of fastidious purchases!

Pay Social Security Claims

Fifty-one claims for lump sum benefit under Title II of the Social Security Act, amounting to $2,670.01, were certified for payment to claimants in the area served by the Joliet field office of the Social Security Board during the month of June. G. A. McCollum, manager of the Joliet office announced today.

Average payment in these claims was $52.35, as compared with the average of $45.98 paid to claimants in May. This average represents a new high in the size of lump sum payments made in Joliet area since the opening of the Joliet office last October.

"Despite the increase in the number of claims filed with our office there are many who have neglected to collect the lump sums due them," Mr. McCollum pointed out.

"Benefits are payable to persons who have reached the age of 65 years since January 1, 1937 and who have worked at any time since that date in commerce or industry. Employees need not retire from their jobs in order to obtain the benefits due them. Benefits are also payable to the legal heirs of persons who have died, regardless of their age, after having been similarly employed. In both cases the benefit payment amounts to 3 1-2 percent of covered wages," he explained.

According to a six-month study of claims certified for payment to claimants in the Joliet field office area since January, 1938, $13,116.27 has been paid to wage earners who have reached 65 or to the survivors of deceased wage earners.

A record number of claims, 83, were certified in April, involving the disbursing of $3,036.29 to claimants. Claims certified in May failed to reach this volume, but a higher average payment per claim resulted in $3,356.77 being returned to workers and survivors in the form of payments.

The Joliet, office located in the Morris building, serves the counties of Will, Grundy, Kendall, Kane, LaSalle, Kankakee, DeKalb and Iroquois.

Morning Star

Mission Supt. Ill; Back On Job

While Supt. Peter McCarthy of the famous Morning Star Mission of Joliet was visiting in Chicago the past week he was taken ill with ptomain poisoning. He was quite ill for a few days but is back on his old job again.

Mr. McCarthy had a very busy month as shown by the following report for June:

Conversions 36; free meals 463; free clothing to 43; police court and jail visits 26; relief to 10 families; paid bus and rail road fares for 11 persons.

A $37,000,000,000 Mortgage

By RAYMOND PITCAIRN

Again, news dispatches report, Washington has indicated that it intends to give serious study to the problem of our National Debt.

Again the American people, against whom this debt is billed, are hoping that the promise will be fulfilled.

For, as the people know, this mortgage against their future earnings has continued to climb until it now tops the $37,000,000,000 mark, and threatens to go still higher. This, it has been computed, means a deferred bill of almost $300 against every man, woman and child in the country.

For public debt, like taxes, must be paid in the end by the men and women who work and save. Government has no mysterious source of funds. It gets its money either by taxing its citizens, whether directly or indirectly; or by borrowing from them, which means more taxation at a later date.

The more government borrows, the heavier becomes the future tax burden. And the heavier the tax burden, the higher the cost of living, with its merciless toll on the pay envelope of every worker, and the pocketbook of every housewife.

It is this fact that makes a $37,000,000,000 bill against their future so serious a concern to all citizens. That is why they ask a halt in our steadily mounting National Debt. That is why they continue to demand economy in government.

Americans, always generous, are glad to help all who need help. But they oppose waste in government, or elsewhere, particularly when that waste must be paid for out of their pockets.

What Americans demand is a realization on the part of Washington that it is they, the people, who bear the current costs of government, and in the end must pay off its debts.

A debt of $37,000,000,000 or more is too heavy a mortgage on their future earnings and their hopes for sound recovery.

Scouts' Parents Visit Camp

Several of the parents of our Tinley Park Boy Scouts, Troop No. 53 visited the boys at Camp Waters near Buchanan, Mich. last Sunday. They motored there in their automobiles and arrived at about 11 o'clock. From all reports it is said they really enjoyed their visit and are pleased to see the boys having a wonderful time. They returned home about 8:30 that evening.

Among those who visited the boys in camp were Mr. and Mrs. Walter and Johnson, Mr. and Mrs. H. Freitag, Mr. and Mrs. Wm. Wannemacher, Mr. and Mrs. Aug. Mesenbrink, Mr. Ernest Anderson and mother Mrs. Anderson, Mrs. Hilding Anderson, Mrs. Bjork, Miss Ruth Freitag and Miss Bernetta Wannemacher.

Scoutmaster True Daniels went for the whole weekend to assist the boys with their tests. He reports that the Tinley Park group is one of the highest ranking troops in camp. Every boy is expected to come back next Saturday in second class and some have already passed a portion of first class work. The Camp Court of Honor will be held Friday evening at camp at which time the boys will be awarded all badges and honors earned during the camp training.

In the near future there will be a public investiture ceremony and stunt night. At this time there will be a report of camp and the camp log will be read. Movies and pictures have been taken and will be shown to the public then.

Dolton Unbeaten

Tinley Park baseball team was subdued by Dolton 18 to 10 last Sunday afternoon at Dolton. Fifteen reckless errors were against their sad downfall in the Southwest Suburban league contest. Tinley out hit their rivals 13 to 11, five of their total hits were for extra bases including a homer by Robert Bormet. Bormet hit a triple in the second inning with the bases loaded and a double to lead the Tinley Hitters.

Tinley Park will end their first half of the pennant fight this coming Sunday at Homer.

Unleavened Bread Old Egyptians and the ancient Chinese centuries ago made "a leavened loaf of the flour of grain." Through most literature there have been allusions to bread, Athenaeus mentioning 62 varieties. The unleavened form of bread has been used ever since man learned to use grain for food.
